MAITRE LABORI ILL IN BOSTON

BRIBE TO FREE THAW

MAITRE FERNAND LABORI, famous French lawyer and defender of Captain Dreyfus, who was stricken with appendicitis on visit to Boston and is now dangerously ill in a Back Bay hospital.

DREYFUS DEFENDER STRICKEN

Maitre Fernand Labori, foremost lawyer of France, who led the successful fight which freed Captain Dreyfus from Devil's Island, is dangerously ill in Boston, it was learned today.

His presence in Boston had been kept a secret by his friends and members of his family, who are at the Hotel Touraine. They did not desire that alarming reports of his illness be sent to France, where the lawyer is the idol of the French people.

M. Labori came from Montreal one week ago, where he was one of the leading figures at the meeting of the American Bar Association, dividing honors with Viscount Haldane, Lord Chancellor of England. At the earnest invitation of prominent Boston lawyers attending the convention Maitre Labori, who was accompanied by his wife, three daughters and his son, started for Boston.

Attacked by Appendicitis.

On the way he was attacked with appendicitis. He was removed from the train to the Eliot Hospital, No. 107 Audubon road, Back Bay, where he was operated upon by Dr. Charles Mixter. The operation, it was said today, was a complete success.

M. Labori's son started yesterday for France to allay the fears of his father's relatives and friends there.

It is thought that the famous lawyer will be strong enough to be taken to France in two weeks. All hope of his visiting the principal cities of the country has been abandoned.

Labori Defended Zola.

M. Labori is fifty-three years old. He stands without a peer as a trial lawyer in France. He endeared himself to the mass of the people by his defence of Zola, the author who was charged with treason, and of Captain Dreyfus, in whose defence Zola had written. Dreyfus was literally railroaded to his prison. Then Zola began his campaign to free him. An appeal was filed and Labori fought the cases for months in the French courts and won. Dreyfus was freed and restored to his rank in the French army.

The case of international fame which Labori has handled in recent years was his defense of "Baron" and Mme. Humbert, the famous Continental swindlers.

Wife and Daughters Visit Him.

Labori's wife and three daughters are at the Touraine and visit him daily at the hospital. The eldest daughter said today:

"Father was stricken soon after the meeting of the American Bar Association in Montreal, which he came to America to attend. He had visited the United States several years ago and wished to see it again and to have his wife and children see it with him."

LAY OTHER KILLINGS TO CURATE

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Three girls and possibly a fourth are now believed by the police to have been slain by Curate Hans Schmidt, confessed murderer of Anna Aumuller. Three of these young women are:

ANNA AUMULLER, whose dismembered body he threw into the Hudson and whom he admits killing.

JOSEPHINE HAAS of Aschaffenburg, Germany, who was killed ten years ago while Schmidt was a student there. She was cut up and buried.

HELEN GREEN, believed to be of New York, now missing, who wrote Schmidt she could not live without him.

The fourth and latest possible victim about whom the police of London and Berlin are now inquiring is:

VERA HARRIS, said to be the wife of "Dr." Muret in London, and a friend of Schmidt.

Posed as "Count."

Miss Green met Schmidt some time last Winter. Later she was frequently seen in his company by persons who recognize the pictures of Schmidt as the man well known in the night life along the Gay White Way as "The Count," who represented himself as the son of noble parents.

It was learned today that many people in both St. Boniface and St. Joseph's parishes, with which Schmidt was connected in this city, entrusted their savings with him. Schmidt won the confidence of many of the aged women of the parish, among them many widows, and it is said he induced them to turn over to him their savings for safe keeping.

It is with this money and money stolen from the collection boxes of the churches where he was assistant pastor, that Schmidt secured the funds that made it possible for him to pose as a wealthy nobleman among the frequenters of Broadway cafes.

Some time ago Miss Green disappeared after declaring that she was going to Chicago. She promised to write to several of her friends from there, but no word has ever come from her.

The strange hold that Schmidt held over most of the women with whom he came in contact was explained today by

Fire Scare Wakes Up Stock Exchange

A blazing awning at the windows of the brokerage offices of F. T. Jackson, on the Congress street side and eighth floor of the Exchange building, attracted the attention of some excitable person who rang in an alarm from the box on the corner of State and Washington streets today. The large amount of apparatus and the usual congested condition of traffic at that point caused great excitement.

For the first time in months there was some real excitement on the floor of the stock exchange, and that once busy, but now sleepy mart was emptied in quick time. The fire burned itself out before the firemen arrived.

Allow Time for Berkshire Road

No opposition appeared before the Public Service Commission today on the petition of the Berkshire Street Railway Company for an extension of time within which it shall complete its extensions to Pittsfield and North Adams. Pittsfield was not represented at the hearing. City Solicitor Barrington of North Adams said that he would not oppose an extension until January 1, 1915, so far as his city is concerned. Bentley Warren, appearing for the company, outlining the reasons for the delay, said it is due to causes which the company could not control.

COUNSEL SURE THAW WILL NOT GO TO ASYLUM

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Moses Grossman, Thaw's lawyer, who is here watching Jerome, said today:

"We thoroughly expect that Thaw will never see the inside of Matteawan again, because we have every reason to expect from Governor Felker a decision against the New York authorities."

SULZER LOSES FIGHT AGAINST FOUR SENATORS

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 19.—By the unanimous vote of the high court of impeachment, Governor Sulzer today lost the first fight made by his counsel, when the court declined to uncoil Senators Wagner, Frawley, Sanner and Ramsperger.

The action of the court followed a statement by Chief Judge Cullen, in which he ruled against the contention of the Governor's counsel.

The grounds of opposition to the four senators were, briefly:

Against Wagner—That he was interested because he succeeded to the office of Lieutenant-Governor in case the impeachment was sustained.

Against Frawley, Ramsperger and Sanner—That they were prosecutors in the case and had already formed and expressed their judgment.

The decision followed a legal battle in which Judge D. Cady Herrick led the Governor's forlorn hope of unseating his senatorial enemies, and Judge Alton B. Parker met the attack on behalf of the board of managers.

The court listened with marked attention to every word of the counsel and the action of the presiding judge in ruling for immediate consideration first, and then for sustaining the right of the Senators, came as an electric shock.

Immediately after the vote was taken on the question as to whether or not the challenges of the senators should be entertained, the clerk was directed to read the articles of impeachment which he did.

Following the reading of the articles of impeachment, Louis Marshall, for Governor Sulzer, attacked the jurisdiction of the court as a whole in an argument in which he went into the constitutionality of the Assembly's action in presenting the impeachment charges.

He asked that the articles be dismissed. Judge Parker desired to consult with his associates upon the reply on behalf of the board of managers, and at 12:23 the court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

A $15,000 high pressure water service, drawing from the nearby marshes with centrifugal pumps, will be a feature.

SHERIFF'S EXPOSE OF PLOT SENSATION IN FIGHT FOR FUGITIVE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—A tremendous sensation in the Thaw case was created here today when Sheriff Holman Drew of Coos County, now one of Thaw's federal keepers, announced he was offered a $1,000 bribe to let Thaw escape back into Canada.

SHERIFF TELLS OF BRIBERY ATTEMPT

In Colebrook Drew was in charge of the sheriff has been appointed a federal jail Thaw at the Monadnock House, pending an extradition hearing and the habeas corpus writ hearing. Since then Thaw as sheriff of the county. He had custody of Thaw, with Marshal Nute. But, at the time of this bribe offer, he was only a New Hampshire officer, so far as Thaw went. The sheriff's story of the attempted bribery was as follows:

He was approached in Colebrook by a delegation of Coosbrook, a Thaw sympathizer, and was offered $500 for himself and $500 for my deputy, Kelsea, to permit Thaw to be placed in the physician's automobile and taken back across the border. This man told me he was being paid $50 a day and represented the Canadian government."

Gives Doctor's Name.

When the sheriff was asked who this would-be briber is he gave the name of a Coaticook physician, who is a nephew of a justice of the Court of the King's Bench and who is the same man that Jerome branded in public as being back of Jerome's arrest for gambling at Coaticook.

The sheriff's statement created much comment around the Eagle Hotel and Concord generally. People feel, it is said, that as the sheriff declares, a fair officer of Arthury should be made to an officer of the law who was guarding Thaw.

The question has been raised whether steps could not be taken to press the charge at Coaticook, or at least to identify the Canadian authorities that [illegible]

JEROME DENIES HE SEEKS A NEW WRIT

Coaticook physician said he represented the Dominion government.

Despatches today from New York quoted William T. Jerome as saying Thaw's mentality does not enter into the present argument.

"Thaw's extradition is asked because he is a person charged with a crime in the State of New York," he said, "and not at all because he is an insane person. There is no way to extradite an insane person. The question of mental condition does not enter into the extradition proceedings in any way."

It is the opinion of Moses H. Grossman, one of Thaw's leading counsel, that Thaw's stay in New Hampshire will be a protracted one.

"We thoroughly expect," he declared, "that Thaw will never see the inside of Matteawan again. We have every reason to expect from Governor Felker a decision against the New York authorities.

Thaw has a new argument to prove he is sane. Said he today:

"September 9 Minister of Justice Doherty had me left deserted at Norton Mills without money or food and even without breakfast. His action proved that the Canadian Immigration Department officials had found me perfectly sane, because no government would turn a lunatic loose in the woods."

Can't Extradite Insane Person, Jerome Admits

There is no way to extradite an insane person.

The question of insanity does not enter the extradition proceedings in any way.

Thaw's extradition is asked because he is a person charged with a crime in the State of New York, and not at all because he is an insane person.—William Travers Jerome.

JEROME BLUNDERED, SAYS ATTORNEY P. J. KELLEY

P. J. Kelley, a Boston lawyer, is surprised at the manner in which William Travers Jerome has handled the case of Harry K. Thaw since the latter made his escape from Matteawan.

Mr. Kelley was for a short time assistant district attorney under John B. Moran. He says:

"The law in the Thaw case is so simple that it is amazing Jerome, or the legal authorities of New York, don't see it, or haven't seen it so far, apparently.

"Harry K. Thaw is legally in the position of a minor over whom a guardian has been appointed by the court, except that in his case the guardian is the State of New York, which is responsible to the court for his safekeeping.

"Thaw was tried for murder and was found insane by a jury of twelve men, so the court turned him over to the State for safekeeping. In other words, the State was made his guardian, and so the laws of guardianship as well as the legal responsibilities of guardianship apply to this case."

Asked what the procedure should be, Mr. Kelley said:

"All that is required is a special form of writ of replevin known as a writ de homine replegiando—a common law writ and also a statutory writ in this State. As the case of Thaw stands, he was arrested in New Hampshire without authority, or by men who had no authority to arrest him, for he was not guilty of any crime.

"But as a minor his guardian could order him arrested, providing guardianship could be proven. Then a sheriff could be given the writ of replevin and a bond for security and demand the person of Thaw to be returned to his guardian.

"If Thaw should get a habeas corpus all that would be required in court would be a record of the case in New York, showing when and where a jury found Thaw insane and when and where the court appointed the State as Thaw's guardian."

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Sept. 19.—The Dutchess County Grand Jury to-day had under consideration the case of Keeper Barnum of the county jail, who is charged with having permitted Harry K. Thaw to escape. Among the important witnesses for the purpose of testifying before the Grand Jury have been Dr. Kleb, superintendent of the hospital, and William Gordon, prisoner of the Roland House in Beacon, where the alleged accomplices of Thaw stopped while in that city.

THAW OUT FOR AN AUTO RIDE IN CONCORD

Enormous crowds surround Thaw's auto when he goes for an outing in New Hampshire's capital city, and he is acclaimed as a real "conquering hero" by men and women of all ages. While bitter arguments for and against his fight for freedom are heard on all sides, a veritable army cheers him on every possible occasion. In this picture, taken on a trip through Concord to the open fields of the outlying country, are from left to right of picture: Thaw, Sheriff Drew and Special Officer Clark D. Stevens.

Work Is His Remedy.

"He seems more rational when he has something to occupy his mind. Now when he was playing the piano his eyes were normal and he looked like any other person. Of course, afterward, while talking to him, I could not fail to notice the nervous raising of the eyebrows, the shifting of the eyes and the peculiar way he talked.

"I feel sorry for poor Mr. Thaw and think that most of those queer traits can be accounted for by the fact that he has been hunted like an animal for so long."

HARRY EAGERLY AWAITS ARRIVAL OF HIS MOTHER

CONCORD, N. H. Sept. 19.—Harry Thaw is impatient for his mother to get here. Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw or Pittsburgh is expected tomorrow. Rooms 1 and 2, on the second floor of the Eagle Hotel, have been reserved for her. They are front rooms, overlooking Main street and close to the "Throne Room" suite which Harry occupies.

Harry came down to breakfast at 9 o'clock today accompanied by former Governor William A. Stone of Pennsylvania, who is legal representative of the Thaw family; H. J. Rice, Harry's secretary, and Sheriff Drew.

They went to their table, which is in a back corner of the dining room. Thaw gave his order to the table girl for steak, rolls, coffee and other items, he he had a keen appetite after his day in the open yesterday.

Harry brought with him a stack of fifty or more letters, which he opened, scanned, then ranged in neat piles about his plate. He was rather moody, glancing up once in a while from his reading and scanning the dining room.

Harry's table waits six and none except his personal party sits at it. A reporter asked Harry today if he enjoyed the auto ride of the day before. He replied:

"Yes, I had a great time. But it was not for the auto ride itself you know, but rather to get out into the country for a good walk."

Harry needs a hair-cut, especially in the back of the neck. Secretary Rice was asked about it and he said Harry is afraid of catching cold if he has his hair cut now. For a man of Harry's marked fresh-air inclinations this seemed odd.

Harry is particular about his appearance and his neglect of his hair has caused comment.

He has a new black suit, wearing it down to supper last night for the first time.

After breakfast Harry retreated to his room and would not talk. Later he put on hat and coat and prepared for outdoor exercise.

Buys $3.50 Shoes.

Harry was fitted to new shoes today, while editing some manuscript he was preparing. He went in a shoe store yesterday and looked at shoes, but made no selection, asking that a clerk be sent to his rooms today.

The clerk came to the "Throne room" today while Harry was busy over his manuscripts. He said pleasantly to the clerk:

"Pardon me, but I'll go right ahead with this, if you don't mind, while you try on the shoes."

Harry objected to the first pair, saying, "No, those won't do."

The second pair had high box toes.

"The toes are too long," objected Harry.

"Those are regular box toes, Mr. Thaw," said the clerk.

Harry laughed and replied: "Oh, yes, Charles Wise, in the fourteenth century or so, wore shoes with toes reaching clear up toward the knee. Those won't do at all. We would be getting back to old times."

Another pair, black calf boots, pinched Harry a bit, but helped their appearance and, when the clerk stretched them, found them comfortable. He bought them, the price being $3.50.

Harry asked where the shoes were made. When told they came from Rockland, Mass., he quizzed the clerk about their make, asking what a certain toe room was called. The clerk confessed ignorance and Harry jollied him, saying:

Meets Boyhood Friend.

"If the shoes were not made so near here you might know more about 'em," on the well known principle that people overlook the things in their own territory and go afar to see."

A Pittsburgh traveling man, a boyhood acquaintance of Harry, called on him today for a half hour. They chatted about old times at home and laughed about a certain "Bobby" somebody, who has settled down after a gay life. Harry inquired about old friends. They also talked much about coal mines, in which this traveling man is interested. One mine is not paying and Harry asked numerous questions about the working of the shaft.

THAW BOOMED AS BUYER OF MRS. EDDY HOME

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—Harry K. Thaw is being boomed as a possible purchaser of the big estate where Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, founder of the Christian Science Church, lived for many years.

Mayor Charles J. French, who paid a personal call on Harry, to welcome him to Concord, says broach this plan to Harry today. Care was taken when Harry went on an auto ride to have the Eddy place suggested as a point of local interest. Harry was driven by the grounds. He remarked:

"That is a fine estate."

The Mayor called on Harry in the "Throne room," saying:

"We hope you will be with us a long time yet."

"I hope so, too," replied Harry, "but, of course, I want to get back to my own home in Pittsburgh. If I am freed under the federal writ, I can go there and live peacefully. I would probably go to Boston for a short time, but I want to go home, naturally."

THAW PLEASED BY SCENERY OF CONCORD HILLS

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—Harry Thaw has a good idea of Concord scenery now. He complained on the trip down from Littleton of not having seen Littleton much. But he had had a sight-seeing trip about Concord that pleased him greatly.

"This has been the most enjoyable day I have had in years," said Thaw, as he returned from a long automobile ride in the country. The outing was arranged by Sheriff Drew, who has Thaw in custody pending the outcome of the extradition hearing before Governor Felker next Tuesday.

Through Front Door.

Accompanied by the sheriff and his assistant, special officer Clark D. Stevens, newspapermen and photographers, Thaw was ready to leave the Eagle hotel when Drew saw that the report that Thaw was to be given an airing had attracted a large crowd in the square outside. The sheriff suggested that they avoid the crowd by going through a rear entrance and boarding the automobile in an alley. This did not suit Thaw at all.

"The front door or nothing for me," he said, and the sheriff let him have his way.

With the cheers of the crowd ringing in their ears, the party whizzed out of the city, through the village of Penacook, to Boscawen. There Thaw got out to stretch his legs, with Officer Stevens. Thaw was in fine fettle, and for more than two miles hit up a pace that forced Stevens to do his best. When they climbed back into the car, Thaw's cheeks had a healthy flush, and he was in much better condition as to mind than was his guardian.

Anxious for Sound Sleep.

"This has made me feel like going to bed early and getting a good sleep," said Thaw when he got back. But before retiring he went over with his lawyers the result of their all-day search in the law books of the State Library for precedents bearing upon the extradition proceedings before Governor Felker Tuesday.

COUNCILLOR'S WIFE TELLS OF SYMPATHY FOR THAW

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—Mrs Noone, wife of Councillor Noone of Peterborough, met Harry Thaw and said she "feels sorry for him."

Mrs. Noone had an unusually good chance to observe Harry. She and Councillor Noone were brought into the hotel parlor by Sheriff Drew. Harry was seated at the piano playing in carefree manner. The sheriff took Mrs. Noone close to the player and stopped, expecting Harry would turn around.

He did not, however, but continued to play until he reached the end of the piece, which was a classical one. The Councillor's wife listened, never taking her eyes from the face of Thaw. Later when asked what she thought of him she said:

THE EVER BUSY BUTLER CORNER

NEW ENGLAND WOMEN DISCUSS EVELYN THAW

WORTHY OF SAVING? WHAT IS YOUR VIEW?

Was Evelyn Thaw worth saving? The concensus of opinion is that she undoubtedly was. AMERICAN readers take issue with Gertrude Atherton, the novelist, who declared that Stanford White's life was worth more than Evelyn Nesbit's, on the ground that ANY soul is worth saving.

Here are a few more letters from people who are interested in the discussion:

Was Evelyn worth saving? Yes, a soul is always worth saving. My friends and I think that Evelyn is the direct cause of all the trouble. Many other men might have done the same as Thaw if their wife kept kindling the fire instead of closing the damper; especially when a woman knows that her husband has a violent temper. Many women can avoid trouble by prudence.

Thaw's soul was worth saving as well. Only a mother can understand the agony that Evelyn's heart must have suffered.

A CONSTANT READER.

Chance for White, Too.

Certainly Harry Thaw was not justified in killing the man White, however bad the latter's life may have been. There was a chance that White might reform and lead a life that would be of real value to the community. Mrs. Atherton's comment on the case was doubly made without deep thought. Evelyn Thaw was worth saving, but how many are there who would undertake the task?

DR. S. F. A. PICKERING.
Portsmouth, N. H.

Says "Give Evelyn a Chance."

I was much interested in Mrs. Atherton's views on Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, but I can't say I agree with such uncharitable sentiments. I am one of those who believe that, every human creature is worth saving, especially a young woman who was a slip of a girl when snared by White and his kind.

I have always felt that Evelyn never had a real chance to get into the "straight and narrow path" we hear so much about but which few consistently thread. She had scarcely reached the age of reason and of self-control. Therefore, it seems to me that she is entitled to the sympathy of the public and should not be condemned by so-called church people and moralists.

MRS. O. L. FRANK.
Nashua, N. H.

Reap What We Sow.

All persons must reap what they sow. When the world realizes this there will be less depravity. The Good Book tells us, "Thou shalt not, etc." It makes no distinction between the sexes. Why do we? Every soul is worth saving.

AUGUSTA F. TRIPP.

Has Accomplished Good.

Was Evelyn Nesbit Thaw worth saving? Who among our sex was ever taught during those happy nursery days such design? Certainly I was not and I question whether Gertrude Atherton's mother expounded such a doctrine. However, the question is decided and decided rightly. Evelyn, like many others, was worth saving. Notwithstanding her career, I believe that she has accomplished good by living. She is indeed an example. Can any young girl with ordinary sense, read the story of her tragic life without being impressed with her's was not the proper life to live.

I was greatly impressed with Eugene Debs when he started a few weeks ago that he had opened the doors of his home to a girl of so-called questionable character. He summed up, not only the case of Evelyn Thaw, but of all others in her world when he said, "I am going to give society an opportunity to prove this girl as I have done." Then Mr. Debs, with his characteristic regard for others and unquestioned Christian spirit added, "What would Christ have done?"

A QUINCY WOMAN.

"Just One More Unfortunate."

Evelyn Thaw, to quote Tom Hood, is just "one more unfortunate." I would hardly call her not worth saving, but think on the contrary that she was worth any amount of effort necessary to save her, even a considerable amount of sacrifice on the part of some of those saintly ones who are now foremost, sitting in their easy chairs, to condemn her.

STELLA MARIA.
Walpole.

"Evelyn Earns Own Living."

Evelyn Thaw is a living argument against the theory of Mrs. Atherton. Why? Well, because instead of following a life of ease and affluence, which evidently would not be difficult for her to find, she has shown her ambition and independence by earning a living for herself and child on the stage.

MRS. JOHN R. SALES.
Brockton.

Asks Sympathy for Fallen.

When a young woman has shown a desire to help herself she is entitled to the sympathy and help of others. Evelyn Nesbit has done just this, so Mrs. Atherton's idea is contradicted on its face. Let us have greater expression of humanity and sympathy for the down-trodden, say I.

MISS GRACE R. MEAGS.
Haverhill.

Says Evelyn Has Saved Herself.

Evelyn Nesbit appears to have more courage and independence than many of her critics. When a girl with a child can earn $1,000 a week, or more, for her acting (or a few hours a day, one doesn't need to have anxiously bother themselves as to whether she is worth saving or not. In my opinion, she has already saved herself.

MRS. AMOS JORDAN.
Newburyport.

Cites Scripture in Argument.

If Mrs. Atherton had been through one-quarter of what poor Evelyn Nesbit it understand she doesn't want to be called Thaw, and I shall favor her by omitting it) has been through she probably wouldn't be so severe in her views. I think the best return to Mrs. Atherton's argument is that she should not forget the forgiveness in christ of the debauched but penitent Mary Magdalen.

MISS GRACE ELLIS.
Haverhill.

Evelyn to Blame.

We are not on this earth to sin. I think that Harry Thaw did what he could not help when he shot White. However, I believe that Evelyn was to blame. When she tired of Thaw she aroused his anger by making references about her life with White. Notwithstanding this I am of the opinion that she was worth saving. And allow me to state that, although a Canadian, I am ashamed of the Canadian officials. Their conduct while handling the case of Thaw is beyond apology.

A CANADIAN.

"Evelyn Only Made to Be Cast Aside"

Thaw killed a man who was of some use to the community, a genius. He killed White for a girl who was only made to be cast aside when people tired of her.—GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

Evelyn's Love Story

CHAPTER XXIII.

"To come to success is that success?—Of the Favorite Question."

When Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, her slender frame shaking with terror at the murder of White, and with the presentiment of what it might mean to her, fled in an automobile to the apartments of May Mc-Kenzie, she was unable to think clearly.

But, safe in her friend's home, the young wife recovered enough to reflect what she ought to do.

"Get a lawyer right away," her feminine wisdom said. The lawyer whose name came to her first was Lewis L. Delafield of No. 1 Nassau street, who had handled Thaw's business affairs.

It was not down when Mrs. Thaw managed to get in telephone connection with Mr. Delafield, with result that the latter was at the Criminal Courts building when Thaw was brought there for the coroner's hearing.

Detectives Put on Trail.

Later Delafield and Mrs. Thaw talked over the telephone, so that Mrs. Thaw arranged to go to Delafield's office at 2:30 that afternoon. Evelyn knew that detectives were searching for her. She knew, too, that she probably could not avoid being drawn into court.

At 2 o'clock, after an agonized morning, Evelyn went by automobile to the Delafield law offices at No. 1 Nassau street, accompanied by May McKenzie. As Mrs. Thaw left the auto and entered the building she was seen by someone who sent word to police headquarters of her presence. Detectives started after her, armed with a subpoena for the Grand Jury.

When she arrived at Lewis L. Delafield's office it was decided to have a conference held at the office of Delafield & Longfellow, of which Frederick Delafield was senior member, at No. 60 Wall street. So Evelyn started there on foot.

She was a pitiable figure, as she fairly tottered along the two short blocks which separated the law offices. She was accompanied by Lewis L. Delafield and was followed closely by reporters, who had traced her, and by a fast-gathering crowd. It seemed as though the girl would collapse. To the reporters she said:

Too Painful to Discuss.

"The incident of last night is too painful to discuss. I am not a fugitive from justice. I am here with my lawyer and I shall not try to get away.

"I HOPE POOR HARRY WILL SOON GET OUT OF HIS TROUBLE. I DID NOT THINK HE WOULD DO IT."

Evelyn was clad in a dark brown, with a heavy automobile veil. The dark color of her gown only accentuated the slim lines of her graceful figure.

She arrived at the office of Delafield and Longfellow at three o'clock and was there three hours. While she was there Mr. and Mrs. George Lauder Carnegie came. Mrs. Carnegie was Margaret Thaw, Harry's favorite sister and one who had stood by him in many a lovish scrape. The sister had rallied to her wretched brother's aid as fast as train and auto could bring her.

She is Subpoenaed.

The detectives who sought Evelyn at No. 1 Nassau street with their precious subpoena found she had gone to No. 60 Wall street. There the subpoena was served.

Evelyn was weeping when she went into the conference. The three hours she was there and the discussion—what it was—proved a terrible strain upon her. She was barely able to walk when the session was over at six o'clock.

No information was given out from the meeting, except the assurance that Evelyn would remain in the city. But it was reported—and this rumor went from town to town—that Evelyn had brought Mr. Delafield or Mr. Longfellow a bundle of letters, including one which Stanford White had written her a few days before.

After the conference the question was in air. Evelyn got without the crowd which had gathered outside knowing it would herald her the approach of the limousine next to her husband.

Cleverly Evades Crowd.

The lawyers fixed up a clever scheme with the help of the janitor of their building. From their offices on the fourteenth floor they took Evelyn down to the fifth floor. There she was assisted through a window to the roof of No. 59 Wall street, a five-story building. Across this roof and on adjoining one the girl went, and then found a way down to the street through the building at No. 52 Wall street where Lawyer Delafield had his private cab waiting for her. The girl staggered into the cab and collapsed upon a cushioned seat. She was driven quickly to the Hotel Lorraine, where she sought the seclusion of the Thaw apartment.

Later the George Lauder Carnegies came to the Lorraine and remained with Evelyn until 8 o'clock.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

THAW LAWYERS GET COPY OF RECORDS TO MAKE LONG BATTLE

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Sept. 19.

That the Federal district of New Hampshire is preparing for a long legal battle over Harry K. Thaw and his mental condition is indicated by the copying of Thaw records that is being carried on here. The copying is for Thaw's lawyers on order of the United States District Court for New Hampshire.

County Clerk Buck of Westchester is having the copies made. There are hundreds of typewritten pages of the original documents and a battery of stenographers is grinding out the copy as fast as possible. They include all of the different orders and opinions in the three habeas corpus proceedings brought by Thaw before Supreme Court Justices Mooreluane, Mills and Keough which resulted in Thaw being sent back to Matteawan every time.

THAW ON AUTO TOUR LIKES STATE PRISON FROM THE OUTSIDE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—Harry Thaw was keenly interested in the New Hampshire State Prison, while sightseeing by automobile. When they passed the grim prison structure Harry watched it closely and said:

"It looks as if the men there got plenty of good, fresh air."

Harry noted with interest, also, the former home of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, founder of the Christian Science Church. He said:

"That is a fine place."

Rev. S. St. Paul's School, where sons of the rich and exclusive are educated, were playing tennis on the school courts. Harry had the car stopped. He looked on eagerly.

"I'd like to try a set or two," he said to Sheriff Holman Drew. But Drew motioned the chauffeur to drive on.

EVELYN THAW IS BUYER OF CURIOS AT JENKINS' SALE

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Evelyn Thaw and Mrs. Helen Dwelle Jenkins attended the first day's sale at Darling & Co.'s rooms of the Jenkins household furnishings and jewels, valued at $500,000, which she has been forced to sell at public auction to get out of financial straits.

Mrs. Jenkins was one of those concerned in a smuggling case that involved Nathan Allen, a wealthy leather manufacturer of Kenosha, Wis., and John F. Collins of Chicago.

Despite the fact that many of those present came merely to satisfy their curiosity, Mrs. Jenkins sat heavily veiled throughout the selling and few recognized her.

Mrs. Thaw was one of the largest bidders. She bought portieres, paintings, curios and a dining room set, for which she bid $275. Other theatrical folk did a bit of bidding. They were Rose Coghlan, Virginia Norden and Sam Harris.

ROTHSCHILD TELLS HOW HE WILL PICK WIFE

CHICAGO, Sept. 18—Here in brief is the philosophy of Erich von Goldschmidt-Rothschild on love and marriage and other things:

THIRTY is time enough to choose a wife.

TOO MANY MARRIAGES are made nowadays before we meet half the people we are going to.

I DO NOT OBJECT to the slit skirt. When a woman has charms she should not be loth to display them.

I AM WILLING to be charitable, but I do not want to be what is known in America as "easy."

AMERICA CAN BE PROUD of four things—the Grand Canyon, Chicago, its girls and photographers.

And here is young Erich's description of the future Mrs. Rothschild:

SHE MUST be beautiful and have dimples.

HER PRESENCE must suggest a spirit of pride—akin to insolence.

SHE MUST be a woman of sense and tolerance.

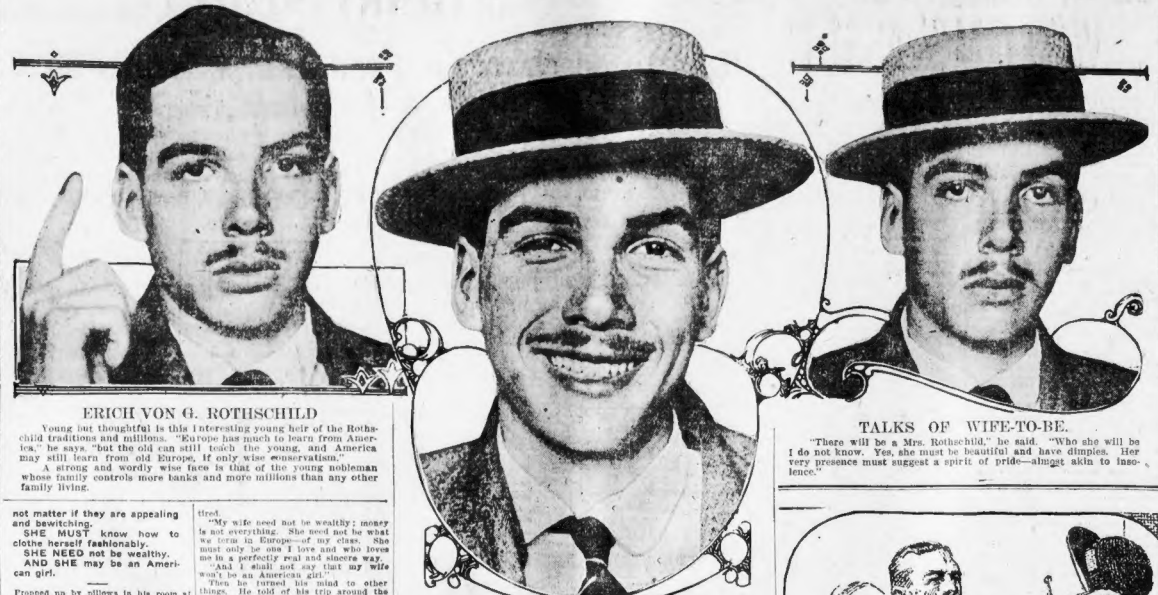
THE COLOR of the eyes does not matter if they are appealing and bewitching.

SHE MUST know how to clothe herself fashionably.

SHE NEED not be wealthy.

AND SHE may be an American girl.

YOUNG ROTHSCHILD TALKS OF LOVE AND MARRIAGE



ERICH VON G. ROTHSCHILD

Young but thoughtful is this interesting young heir of the Rothschild traditions and millions. "Europe has much to learn from America," he says, "but the old can still teach the young, and America may still learn from old Europe, if only wise conservatism."

A strong and wordily wise face is that of the young nobleman whose family controls more banks and more millions than any other family living.

Propped up by pillows in his room at the Blackstone, Erich von Goldschmidt-Rothschild, the youthful scion of the world-powerful house of money kings, smiled feebly as a physician felt his pulse.

"Yes?" he said wearily as Dr. Victor von Varendorff declared he would make a blood test to determine if his patient had malaria. Young Rothschild seemed to regard malaria no worse than a bad cold.

"I incline to believe that the boy is suffering from influenza," said the physician. "But I shall want to know positively."

Young Erich reached for the hand of the man who has been his tutor, physician and traveling companion in a trip around the world.

Wise Doctor a Blessing.

"A wise doctor is a blessing," he said. "I am most fortunate in my friend von Vardendorff. He would succeed most admirably under the Chinese system, which pays the physician only while the patient is well and stops all pay when he is ill."

A dark complexion, bestowed on him by travel and plenty of outdoor air, a small black mustache above a smiling mouth, and dreamy brown eyes—these looked from beneath the covers.

Suddenly the covers flew back and the patient was sitting on the edge of the bed. The doctors entered a word of protest.

"Give me a tie and my coat," said young Erich to his valet.

In a few moments he had fastened the tie to his nightshirt and had put on the coat.

"Now my hat—the straw one," he ordered.

The physician stood aghast. So did the valet. The youth walked to a chair and dropped into it wearily.

"I am ready to be photographed," he declared.

Beneath the coat showed half of the nightshirt. Beneath the nightshirt protruded the bare legs and feet of a Rothschild.

"But you—" began Dr. von Varendorff.

"And—" broke in the valet.

Young Erich beckoned to the photographer of the Evening AMERICAN. He whined one very faint smile.

"Snap away," he said.

In a few minutes he was posing for the first time in America. Once between pictures he said that four things in this country interested him—"the Grand Canyon, Chicago, girls and the photographer."

"Ich liebe, du liebst, er liebt," he said, jokingly. "You see I am still a boy and too young to be very much concerned with love and marriage—at nineteen. One should live the life of a care-free boy until he is twenty-one. Even then he should not marry.

"You would know why? At that age the average young man has not—what is it you say in America? Settled down—that's it. He is liable to be infatuated for the time being and then—then comes regret and blighted hopes and happiness. Too many marriages are made nowadays before we meet half the people we are going to.

"Thirty is time enough to choose a wife. One has then been buffeted on the sea of bachelorhood and can more fully appreciate the joy of a home.

"There will be a Mrs. Rothschild," he said, "Who she will be I do not know. Yes, she must be beautiful and have dimples. Her very presence must suggest a spirit of pride—almost akin to insolence. Yet she must not be haughty. Likewise she must be a woman of sense and tolerance—broad-minded, so to speak. Her eyes? Perhaps they shall be blue—perhaps of a dark color. But they must be appealing and bewitching."

"Her dress?" was suggested.

"I heard that some American women—and men, too—criticise the—the——"

"Slit skirt?"

"Yes, I think that is what you call it," said young Erich. "In my opinion it is attractive and distinctive. When a woman has charms she should not hesitate to display them, providing she does not overstep the bounds of decency. I shall expect my wife to be fashionably attired.

"My wife need not be wealthy; money is not everything. She need not be what we term in Europe—of my class. She must only be one I love and who loves me in a perfectly real and sincere way.

"And I shall not say that my wife won't be an American girl."

Then he turned his mind to other things. He told of his trip around the world and of his impressions of America.

"Europe has much to learn from America," he said, "but the old can still teach the young, and America may still learn from Europe—if only wise conservatism."

Again he smiled.

"But I have these things to remember of America—the Grand Canyon, Chicago, girls and the photographer. The first and third are things of beauty. Chicago and the photographer are wizards of speed and thoroughness."

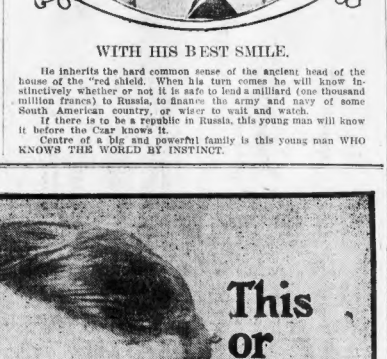
The scion of Europe's money kings leaned back and closed his eyes.

"Fever," said the physician.

The two were left alone.

TALKS OF WIFE-TO-BE.

"There will be a Mrs. Rothschild," he said. "Who she will be I do not know. Yes, she must be beautiful and have dimples. Her very presence must suggest a spirit of pride—almost akin to insolence."



WITH HIS BEST SMILE.

He inherits the hard common sense of the ancient head of the house of the "red shield. When his turn comes he will know instinctively whether or not it is safe to lend a milliard (one thousand million francs) to Russia, to finance the army and navy of some South American country, or wiser to wait and watch.

If there is to be a republic in Russia, this young man will know it before the Czar knows it.

Centre of a big and powerful family is this young man WHO KNOWS THE WORLD BY INSTINCT.

Wins Belfast Wife by Advertisement

Sarah Pendleton, 51, is Bride of Lonesome Californian.

BELFAST, Me., Sept. 19.—Radford S. Russell, unable to find a wife in California who would appear to all his specifications, succeeded by advertising in finding one here.

Miss Sarah L. Pendleton, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Lyman G. Pendleton, answered the advertisement in a Sacramento newspaper, and Russell came East. On his arrival, Miss Pendleton met him at the wharf.

Mr. Russell and Miss Pendleton gave each other the once over and were straightway married by the Rev. Daniel B. Phelan at the Methodist parsonage. The bride is forty-one and her husband is a year older.

BEGIN SEARCH FOR WILLIAMS' ASSETS

The first step in the unraveling of the tangled affairs of George E. Williams, the Braintree millionaire, who squandered thousands of dollars on numerous "affinities" and defrauded friends and acquaintances by daring swindles and forgeries, is being taken today, following the filing by the administrators of his estate of a statement showing his known assets.

These, they declare, amount to $230,000, consisting of real estate valued at $30,000 and of personal property worth $200,000, a total considerably more than he was supposed to possess.

Hunt Williams' Assets.

The estate, nevertheless, is hopelessly insolvent, as his liabilities are now believed to amount to more than a million dollars, and the task of finding out what he did with the money, or whether any of it has been hidden or fraudulently transferred to other persons, seems almost impossible of achievement.

Atherton N. Hunt of Braintree and Emery B. Gibbs of Brookline, the administrators, have filed bonds for $50,000 each with the Norfolk County registrar of probate. The registrar admits that he has an older will drawn up by Williams. Mr. Hunt had not heard of this older will, but today hinted that a contest was possible, opposing the later document giving Miss Wellington, Williams' stenographer, $25,000, saying:

"I have never seen such a will, but at the same time I would not be surprised if such a legal document should be presented to the Probate Court."

Williams' associates at the office at No. 114 Devonshire street declared the instrument drawn last May was the only one in existence.

Look for More Wills.

Attorneys today insisted that there was a possibility that several wills would turn up in the course of time.

One man familiar with Williams' affairs said: "The finding of other wills than the one offered for probate would be no surprise to me. In fact, I believe that the making of wills was just another of those many shifts of his many-sided character.

"He was always a man of an infinite number of expedients, and I suppose he drew up these documents as a blind. Imagine, for instance, that he wanted to borrow $15,000 from one of his business friends, in that case it would be too crude for him to try to argue a man into a belief that he was a very wealthy man in need of temporary accommodation.

"It would be much better from the Williams standpoint to create the impression in another way. I can imagine him making an appointment with his prospective lender, and when the man arrived I can imagine him having the stage all set. He might ask the man to be one of the witnesses to the document and drop some hints as to its contents. The natural inference would be that Williams had considerable property and would not be making a will if he had not. The whole thing made his credit good."

Seek Asset Holders.

One lawyer who represents a considerable number of creditors said today: "I do not see that the filing of another will or of a number of wills would make any difference now. So far as the estate is concerned, they are very much like stock in a bankrupt enterprise. All the assets must go, in the nature of things, toward settling the claims of creditors. About the only useful purpose served by any will was to secure the appointment of a capable executor to handle the affairs of the estate until administrators were appointed."

A persistent hunt will be made for Williams' hidden assets, if any. "You may be assured that, if the administrators have any reason to suppose anyone is in the possession of any of the assets of the estate," said Administrator Hunt today, "the law will be invoked to question them."

In view of her constant employment with Williams during his last days of life, it is said that Miss Wellington should be aware of the location and the nature of the property that survived. It is practically certain that the confidential secretary will be invited to disclose the whereabouts. Should she demur, it will be the duty of the administrators to proceed in any way they may find advisable.

"It is not within the power of the administrators to interrogate Miss Wellington," said Attorney Hunt, "without bringing some action in law against her. I have not seen her since she left Mr. Williams' employ. It would be manifestly improper for me to say at this juncture whether or not we intend to take any action against Miss Wellington."

Enters Into Politics.

Williams might have become successful as a politician. His first and only entrance into the political life of Braintree was tinctured with finance and a significant demonstration of his powerful will.

Williams' personal property was taxed at $3,000. Warren B. Keith was elected to the Board of Assessors. By reason of Keith's insistence, it is said, the personal property tax was jumped to $5,000. Williams protested. He was opposed at the hearing by Keith and the valuation remained at $5,000. When Keith came up for re-election the following year, Williams induced a candidate to run against him. Williams campaigned against Keith and Keith was defeated. The following year the personal property tax was reduced. In later years it was usually raised and Williams did not again protest.

Williams was apathetic in so far as taxation was concerned. The assessors sent him blak inventories every year. He failed to make return of them or to respond to personal messages. When he died he was taxed only on a total of $21,828, of which but $5,000 was personal property. His taxes of 1912 and 1913 are unpaid.

Still the "Grace Cottage."

Williams named the cottage he leased at Hough's Neck in honor of another mysterious sweetheart, Grace Faust. On the north and conspicuous side of the little red cottage still reats the word "Grace." The words sign upon which the word was painted is discolored by the elements, but "Grace" stands out boldiuness in gilded letters.

When the music teacher lived there, the cottage was eminently situated upon the extreme edge of the rock. Other cottages have come and encircled it, and it has been occupied by various Summer tenants. Yet the nameplate containing the word "Grace" in letters of gold was not displaced.

Scores of Boston business men, it was said today, have attempted to repudiate genuine notes signed by them and held against the estate of the late George E. Williams since he was branded as a forger, according to statements yesterday by Handwriting Expert William E. Hingston and Attorney Samuel K. Cannon, who represents nine individuals of companies seeking collection.

Some of these men, after repeated repudiation of their signatures, have at last acknowledged them, it is claimed, and will be compelled to meet their delegations.

Expert Hingston believes many who borrowed on their insurance policies through Williams' negotiations with brokers or money lenders, will be ruled financially by court decisions.

Retain Seven Lawyers.

Seven lawyers, it is said, have been retained by individuals holding notes, and the makers of these notes are said to be in a panic. They have attempted to induce these lawyers—or some of them, at least—to abandon their attempts to push payment, it is claimed.

It is said Williams resorted to the practice of calling a note-maker on the phone to his office to straighten out some supposed technicality in the note. There, it is alleged, he hastily showed the victor a false note, and asked that the new one be made out.

In the presence of the signer he tore up the false note and threw away the pieces. In time he would show, it is claimed, two notes to the signer, and would require payment on both.

Germany May Take Part in Big Fair

Wilson Favors Roosevelt as Panama Envoy in Europe.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—President Wilson, in conversation with friends today at the White House, appeared in most cordial terms the proposition that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt be selected by the Panama-Pacific Exposition as a special envoy to Great Britain and Germany to induce those nations to participate in the great international celebration. Secretary of State Bryan likewise indorsed the plan.

While the President was discussing the question, the news came unofficially that Germany had already reconsidered her determination not to take part. This was largely attributed to the efforts already being made in Germany by Director-General Skiff of the exposition.

YOUNG GIRLS VICTIMS OF SCHMIDT PLOTTING

the assertion that he is a hypnotist and has long been a student of the occult. Cable dispatches today, which established the fact that Schmidt and Edward A. Muret, the bogus dentist and Schmidt's partner in the counterfeiting scheme, are cousins, declared that Schmidt and Muret gave hypnotic exhibitions and spiritualistic seances in Europe.

Dispatches from London say that acting on instructions from the New York police Scotland Yard today began co-operating with the Berlin police in an extensive search for a girl with whom Dr. Ernst Muret, friend and possible relative of Hans Schmidt, the murderer, lived in Munich. The girl is believed to be either in Berlin or this city, and it is thought that she can clear up much of the past life of Muret and possibly of Schmidt as well.

The police today have photographs of a stolen death certificate, with numerous blank certificates, which they found secreted in the rooms of Schmidt, which they believe will reveal his plans to become a wholesome executioner.

The detectives expressed the belief the monster was preparing to forge the name of a reputable physician to certificates to cover up the deaths of his intended victims.

This astounding development was quickly followed by other startling disclosures here and abroad.

Today the segments of Anna Aumuller's body will be brought from Hoboken to the East Twenty-Sixth Street Morgue, where Schmidt will be taken to identify them. He told his lawyer that he is willing to undergo the ordeal if it is required. He insists that he can make positive identification.

Many Youg Girls Victims.

Inspector Faurot announced today that his detectives were tracing "a large number of girls," some less than sixteen years of age, who had been victimized by Schmidt and his ally, "Dr." Muret, the pseudo dentist and physician.

This announcement followed the receipt of a cablegram from Scotland Yard, declaring that the dentist prisoner here is believed to be a Dr. Ernst, who had disappeared while under surveillance for his connection with the white slave trade and the publication of objectionable literature.

Another startling cablegram came from Germany, announcing the belief that Muret is Schmidt's cousin, his real name being Adolf Mueller.

Muret Also Much Wanted.

The most significant revelation concerning Muret, came from London. He is a fugitive wanted for illegal surgery upon a woman. The New York authorities have not been able to fix responsibility for the illegal surgery in the Anna Aumuller case.

Muret is also wanted by Scotland Yard for snatching a girl, for white slavery; for fraudulent misrepresentation and for falsely pretending to be a registered medical practitioner.

On a false plea of severe sickness he deceived the magistrate into granting a continuance of his case on the latter charge and fled the country the same morning in April, 1911.

Inspector Faurot said today that he was still uncertain that the prisoner in the Tombs under the name of Hans Schmidt is the real Hans Schmidt. Making deductions from the record of forgery the detectives believe it may develop that the real Hans Schmidt has been replaced by an imposter.

Called Schmidt Father.

Schmidt while posing at No. 724 West Eighty-fourth street as "A. Van Dyke," brought to the house a five-year-old boy who called him "Papa," whom he introduced to Mrs. Adeline Manzer as his son.

Mrs. Manzer said the child bore a striking resemblance to his alleged parent.

Attorney Koehler began today laying the groundwork for an insanity defence of Schmidt. He let District Attorney Whitman know that he proposed asking a court inquiry into Schmidt's sanity. This would necessitate the appointment of a commission or the bringing of the confessed slayer before a laymen's jury.

Another line of defence, however, seems likely to be resorted to in a secondary way. This is an asserted absence of absolute proof of Anna Aumueller's death. Parts of the girl's body cut up by Schmidt and thrown into the Hudson, have been recovered, but the head, which would afford proof positive of identity, still is missing. It is this contingency which is leading the police to keep up a persistent search for the head of the victim.

At the conclusion of an inquest into Anna Aumuller's death conducted by Coroner Schlamm, in Jersey City, the torso found in the Hudson River on September 5 and all other exhibits in the case were ordered surrendered to the New York authorities. The jury brought in this verdict:

"We find that Anna Aumuller came to death on September 2 last in her apartment on the premises at No. 66 Beachhurst avenue, New York city, at the hands of Hans Schmidt."

Finding of the Jury.

Detective Murphy of District Attorney Whitman's office took charge of the examination of witnesses at the inquest.

Anna Hirt of New York testified she knew Anna Aumuller, they having worked together in the rectory of St. Boniface's Church. Mary Banu of Shadyside, who found the torso, also testified.

A dispatch from Chicago says that further identification of Dr. Ernest Muret, the alleged counterfeiting accomplice of Hans Schmidt, as the man who practiced as a physician there under the name of Dr. Arnold Held, was made by Dr. William C. Schulze.

"Held came to our school in the Winter of 1908 and I heard his application," said Dr. Schulze. "Oh, yes; he said he was a physician, and that he had been graduated at Konigsberg, Germany."

1,400 Students at Wellesley College

Wellesley College closed its registration today with a total enrollment of over 1,400. The academic year begins Monday. More than 450 girls, members of the freshman class, will again live in the "village" this year, owing to the lack of room in the campus dormitories.

"L" LINEMAN UNPAID WHILE ILL OF BURNS

Frank T. Burns, an Elevated cable splicer and lineman, today told of the arbitration hearing at Ford Hall how his clothes were burned entirely from his body by an electric wire while he was perched on the top of a pole. He said the shock left him wearing only a hat. He said that he had been severely burned many times, but only once had the Elevated paid him anything during the times he was laid up as the result of these shocks. He said:

I was painting a manhole once and touched a wire which was supposed to be dead. It was charged with 600 volts. I was knocked completely over, turning a somersault. I was laid up four days, without pay.

Again, while I was doing some painting on an Elevated structure, I was shocked by a live wire and terribly burned. I was receiving $2 a day. The Elevated wanted to pay me $1 a day, but I insisted on receiving full pay, and I got it. For the accident when I was burned on the pole, neither J. F. Robinson, who was with me and who also was burned, nor I received a cent's pay. This was on July 15 of this year.

The Elevated today submitted a thirty-nine-page report of wages, working conditions and duties of men employed in the power and maintenance division, and to give time to examine this, the hearing will adjourn at the close of today's hearing until next Thursday morning.

Milford Strike Offenders Jailed

FITCHBURG, Sept. 19.—As an outcome to the recent textile strike at Milford, six Italians were sentenced to nine months in the House of Correction today by Judge Hall of the Superior Court. Another defendant, Isador Bigiacomo, had his case continued for one week. The men were charged with assault upon State police officers and other offences.

Newton Men Fined in Straw Hat Case

Edward McMahon and Edward Roach, both of Newton, who commanded William H. Brown, a prominent business man of Newton, to throw away his old straw hat, were in the Newton District Court today, charged with disorderly conduct. Both were fined five dollars each.

Milk Contractors Dodge Price Issue

Refuse to Meet Farmers, on Advice of Counsel.

Fearing the Federal law, under which several milk contractors are under indictment for restraint of trade, the contractors today declined to discuss the probable price with the producers, represented by a committee of directors of the New England Milk Producers' Association.

The directors have met, however, and the contractors are acting on advice of counsel. The directors said the farmers will demand forty cents per can of eight and one half quarts beginning October 1. This is two cents in excess of the highest price paid last year. The reasons assigned for the increase were: Drought, which shortened the crop of hay 20 per cent.; recent frosts that lessened the corn harvest; the Western drouths caused a jump in prices of fodder; the high price of labor and the decrease in number and advance in price of good milch cows.

200 GARMENT STRIKERS PLAN BITTER FIGHT

A mass meeting of the Ladies' Garment Workers of fifty-one North and West End shops opened at noon today at the strike headquarters, No. 81 North Russell street. According to Business Agent Benjamin Horne, of the union, over 200 of the 500 workers in the affected shops walked out promptly at the time set in the strike order.

"These reported at our headquarters," explained Mr. Horne, "and were promptly formed into so-called 'flying-wedges' to bring out the rest of the workers and picket the 'struck' shops."

According to Mr. Horne, the help employed in thirty-five shops came out early today. A large percentage of the strikers are women and girls.

Three hundred members of the union have not been asked to strike, the proprietors of the shops where they work having lived up to the agreement which ended the big general strike here last March.

ROMANCE CAUSE OF SAXE-WEIMER ROYAL SUICIDE

HEIDELBERG, Germany, Sept. 19.—Romance has caused trouble for years in the family of the Princess Saxe-Weimar, who committed suicide by shooting herself because she could not marry the young banker to whom she was engaged.

Several years ago her brother, Prince Hermann, was forced to resign his titles and leave the army because of his infatuation for an Italian actress. He settled in Londop, adopted the name of Count Ostheim, and married happily.

HUNT BANDITS WHO KILLED 2 IN JEWEL RAID

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Sept. 19.—A posse is searching today for two robbers who entered the jewelry store of J. J. Thompson, here, commanded the clerks to throw up their hands and when they refused, opened fire.

John A. Thompson and Ed Smith fell dead and Paul Townsend was probably fatally wounded.

The jewelry store is almost in the center of the business district and pedestrians passed while the robbers were within. Policemen nearby also were attracted by the shooting, but the robbers fled before they arrived.

TRIPLE TANGLE IN QUEER CASE OF MRS. SENTER

A triple tangle has come to light in the strange case of Mrs. Martha Senter, the former Jamaica Plain eloper, today, still under observation as to her sanity in a Philadelphia hospital after an amazing expenditure of money in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

While the statement was made at the home of her father, Max Fleming of No. 10 Belmore Terrace, Jamaica Plain, that he was on his way to Philadelphia to help her, the detective bureau of the Quaker City made public a telegram alleged to have been sent by Fleming in which he admits she is his daughter, but says he will have nothing to do with the case. He could not be found at his home, however, and neighbors say he has gone to Philadelphia.

The situation was still further confused by the statement of an Albert Gascoigne of Philadelphia, who claims to have been Mrs. Senter's companion on a trip to the scene of her marriage, Manchester, N. H., after securing, as he says, her release from the asylum at Ward's Island, New York, and who maintains that he had arranged for her admission into Bellevue Hospital, New York.

Still another element of mystery was injected into the case when a telegram to Mrs. Senter reached Philadelphia from Boston signed by an "Anna Miller," offering to assist the young woman and requesting that she reply. The telegram was sent in care of the police matron at the Philadelphia City Hall, where Mrs. Senter was first taken.

MRS. W. GOULD BROKAW, whose divorce decree judge says is not in proper form.

MRS. W. GOULD BROKAW

Judge Refuses to Sign Brokaw Decree

Says Mrs. Brokaw Hasn't Divorce Decree in Proper Form.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Supreme Court Justice Kelly of Brooklyn, who granted an interlocutory decree of divorce to Mrs. Mary Blair Brokaw in her suit against W. Gould Brokaw, has refused to sign the decree submitted by her counsel.

"If the plaintiff will submit an interlocutory decree in proper form I will sign it," he wrote.

The Brokaws were separated in 1910, when Mrs. Brokaw by a court decree was allowed $12,000 a year alimony.

Paige Out for Wilder's Seat

SOUTHBRIDGE, Sept. 19.—Calvin D. Paige, former executive councilor, announces his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Congress in the third district in the contest caused by the death of W. H. Wilder. Republicans have been urging Mr. Paige to this action, and they are pleased at his decision. Mayor Hardy of Fitchburg will not enter the field.

'Poor Bookkeeping Adds to Living Cost'

Francis B. Sears Tells Accountants of Distributing Costs.

"Poor bookkeeping adds to the high cost of living," Francis B. Sears, vice-president of the National Shawmut Bank, declared at the convention of the American Association of Public Accountants at the Copley Plaza. He said:

"One of the problems for the accountant to solve is how to reduce the excessive cost of distributing merchandise from the producer to the consumer and so reduce the cost of living. Sometimes 60 per cent. of the retail cost is required to move the shoes from the factory to the buyer."

FACE BROKE OUT IN RED SPOTS

Blotchy All Over. Became Scaly. Scratched Until Made Them Bleed. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Face and Head Cured.

24 Gilbert St., New Britain, Conn. "My little boy's face used to get awful red and sometimes when I used to wash it it would bleed. Then it got blotchy all over and was horrid looking. His face broke out in red spots and then became scaly. He used to scratch them until he would make them bleed. Then his head started to break out. He was restless at night and complained of his face being sore. His head was all little cuts from scratching it.

"So I thought I would send for a sample of the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I only used them for a few days when there was such a change in his looks. His face began to get clear. When the sample was gone I got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment. I washed his face with the Cuticura Soap and warm water every night and morning and applied the Cuticura Ointment for four weeks and his face was cured. I got another cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and was only using them for two weeks and they made his scalp nice and clean. His head was cured." (Signed) Mrs. Isabelle Guenther, May 26, 1913.

For treating poor complexions, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have been the world's favorite for more than a generation. A single set is often sufficient. Sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

CAR CLEW MAY SOLVE FALLON GIRL'S DEATH

Further strength to the foul play theory in the death of Margaret A. Fallon, the Medford girl whose body was found in the Tufts College reservoir, has come to light in the clew that on the afternoon she disappeared she had an automobile engagement with an unknown party, according to Chester Rogers, one of her admirers.

To run this clew down and solve the mystery surrounding the death of the girl they loved, Rogers and his rival, Walter Fennelly, through the efforts of a reporter for the AMERICAN, have forgotten their differences and are working to avenge her being a foul play victim, if such she was.

"Two nights before Margaret disappeared," said Rogers, "she told me that she had an appointment for an auto ride late in the afternoon on which she had the appointment she disappeared. None of us ever saw her after that."

Rogers' statement is backed up by the story of Patrolman Buffum of a Medford main riding to his home before the body was found and inquiring if Miss Fallon was missing. He repeated the same question that very night, too," said Buffum. It is said that Chief Ewell will interview this man today.

The Fallon girls believe Margaret kept her automobile engagement. That afternoon," said Rose Fallon, "Margaret had an engagement to meet Miss Nellie Murphy, of No. 11 Monument avenue, Charlestown, outside the department store where they both worked. Miss Murphy followed Margaret through the store, but when she reached the sidewalk, Margaret had disappeared. We believe Margaret went away in the machine."

The grief shown by Fennelly at the funeral of the girl he loved so touched the Fallon sisters that they have become reconciled to him. Fennelly was refused admittance to the Fallon house previous to the funeral. As the cortege passed on to the church, Fennelly, his head bared and bowed, with tears streaming down his face, stood on the sidewalk. At the services in St. Clement's Church he occupied a pew far back in the rear.

After the final absolution had been pronounced he stood at the door until the casket had been placed in the hearse. When he started to walk after the carriages, the Fallon girls relented and invited him into their carriage. The shades were kept down that he might not be seen by the excited father.

Pinkerton in England.

PLYMOUTH, England, Sept. 19.—W. A. Pinkerton, the famous American detective, arrived in England today on the Olympic. Mr. Pinkerton said his trip was for vacation purposes, but admitted he would visit Scotland Yard.

LONDON EDITOR LAUDS HEARST PUBLICATIONS

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Arthur Spurgeon, managing director of Cassell's, London, arrived here on the Canard liner Caronia en route to address the Toronto Press Club in Toronto.

He said press censorship of books was needed in England, but thought from what he had read of American book production that censorship was unnecessary.

He said William Randolph Hearst had made a pronounced impression with his publications in England. He was especially interested in the contract between Mr. Hearst and Hall Caine at $100,000 a year for four years, during which time the novelist will probably produce two books a year.

"The enterprise of Mr. Hearst compels the admiration of all publishers in Europe," he said. "But I think an English publisher would hesitate a long time before emulating it at that figure."

Regarding the plays criticised in New York, Mr. Spurgeon said they could not be tolerated for a moment in England. A play that has to do with hereditary diseases he considered beneficial.

"It will come to pass," said Mr. Spurgeon, "that this country will have to have a Federal Commission to regulate the matters with which that play deals. In India regulations have caused a striking decrease in disease in the army."

Dissolves Cordage Trust Injunction

Federal Judge Hough in New York vacated an injunction order granted by the Federal Court May 24, 1910, which tied up assets of the Standard Cordage Company, which has two plants in Boston, an $8,500,000 corporation. These assets, amounting to $415,000, are in the hands of a receiver.

Planning Council for City of Malden

Mayor Will Appoint Council to Have Charge of All Property.

A city "planning council" to have charge of the development, growth and health of the city and citizens is to be established in Malden, on the recommendation of Mayor Charles Schumacher. City Solicitor Harvey L. Bonfwell has prepared an ordinance creating the council, which will be composed of five citizens, appointed by the Mayor.

Under the new ordinance, the council will give attention to housing and comforts of the residents of the city, have charge of all proposed city buildings to be erected and of alterations to existing buildings, plan the care of the public grounds, highways and city property, establish street lines, pass upon proposed buildings and franchises.

Jailed for Brother, Now Asks Pardon

Robert A. Cowan, an inmate of the East Cambridge jail, asks a pardon, claiming he is serving a three-year sentence to shield his brother and saying he confessed robberies he did not commit.

He claims as a further condition of his silence the brother promised to reform, take care of the old folks and pay him $3 per week during his term. All of which was done up to last February, when the brother, he alleges, returned to his old way of living and fled from Boston.

GIRL ELOPES WITH MAN SIRE DISCHARGED

Gino Barone and Jennie Lauricella, both well-known church and social workers in the North End, are today in New York on a honeymoon trip, following their elopement, despite the opposition of the bride's father. A telegram from Mansfield announcing the wedding read in part:

"Dear Pa:

"We are on our way to New York, don't worry; we are well.

JENNIE AND CIRO."

Young Barone, two years ago, was a clerk in the pharmacy of the young woman's father, Felix Lauricella, whose place of business is at Hanover and Richmond streets. It was there that he first met her.

Lauricella became incensed at Barone's attentions to his daughter, however, and discharged him. Barone, not in the least perturbed, went to a rival pharmacy, where he worked so earnestly that he built it up into a strong competitor of that run by his sweetheart's father.

FEAR TWO LOST IN SHIPWRECK OFF WINTHROP

Search was made today along the shore at Winthrop for wreckage of a large thirty-eight power cruiser which is believed to have pounded to pieces on the jagged rocks at Great Head during the heavy northeast gale last night. The owner of the boat, thought to be a man named Allen, was aboard with a companion. Fears were today entertained for their safety.

Mrs. Frank Hickox, who figured in a yachting accident last Saturday off Deer Island, was the first person to observe the plight of the boat. Seeing cotton lights flashing in the bay, she at once told T. Henry Staples, who put off in a light skiff and went within 100 feet of the disabled power boat.

Owing to the heavy sea and a rapidly filling skiff, Staples could offer but little assistance. He did, however, obtain information that there were two men aboard the craft and that they had made the trip from Gloucester and were bound for Boston. They said that half a mile from Deer island their engine broke down and they had drifted over Fawn Bar reef onto Great Head. The man also said that his name was Allen and that he lived in Needham. He wanted someone to telephone his wife.

Staples returned to shore and informed the United States Volunteer Life Saving crew of the plight of the cruiser. After several unsuccessful attempts to launch their boat the crew finally got under way and reached Great Head. After searching for over an hour they gave it up, as no trace of the boat could be found.

HUERTA AND CONGRESS IN HOT WRANGLE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Dispatches from Mexico City say that a serious quarrel, fostered by the dictatorial methods of President Huerta, has broken out between the national executive and Congress.

After a long and heated debate, the Chamber of Deputies refused to confirm the appointment of Eduardo Tamariz, a member of the Catholic party as Minister of Public Instruction. Approval of cabinet appointments by the Mexican Congress is necessary under the action. Heretofore there has been no such dissension and the present situation establishes a precedent. The vote against confirmation of Tamariz was 108 to 20. The Catholic party will probably control the next national election despite the efforts of Huerta to get the electoral machinery under his own domination.

The Catholic party will meet Sunday when it will probably designate Foreign Minister Gamboa as its choice for president.

That Huerta is preparing to step out of the race for the Mexican presidency next month is indicated by other dispatches which have reached Washington within the past twelve hours. That General Felix Diaz, if elected president, would be no more than a pawn for Huerta is taken for granted here.

As head of the army Huerta always will remain the most powerful man in Mexico, while he has a man supposedly weak, like Diaz, in the Presidential chair.

MRS. JESSIE ESENBERG of Chelsea, whose father-in-law seeks to annul her marriage to his son.

FATHER-IN-LAW ASKS DIVORCE FOR HIS SON

Mrs. Jessie Esenberg of Chelsea today declared that her husband, Charles Esenberg, to whom she was married last June, must support her. She filed a bill in the Suffolk superior court today, asking for a petition, filed by her husband's father, seeking an annulment of their marriage, be dismissed.

The petition of Esenberg's father asks that the marriage of his son be declared void on the grounds that the latter was only sixteen years old, although he represented to the justice he was twenty-one when he married Jessie Chandler, under the name of Frances Chandler, at Nashua, N. H., November 16, 1912.

Young Esenberg gave the name of Charles Isaly at the time of the ceremony, according to his father's petition, and also that he had lived with his (the) son at his wife.

CARR CLAIMS 'L' IS TRYING TO DEFEAT HIM

The Boston Elevated Company is spending money in its district to defeat me for re-election because of my activity in the legislature the past year to bring about the removal of the elevated structure," declared Representative Patrick B. Carr of Charlestown, before the Boston Transit Commission today.

The hearing was on a resolve passed by the Legislature directing the Transit Commission to investigate into the cost and advisability of removing the elevated structures toSullivan square and to Dudley street and around Atlantic avenue and the substitution of tunnels therefor.

A number of Boston legislators, real dealers and many property owners were present to urge favorable action on the proposition. The Boston Elevated Company was attacked by many of the speakers for its opposition before the last Legislature, to a bill for the removal of the structure. Representative Senator James H. Brennan and Representative Peter F. Tague of Charlestown attacked the T. C.

MGR. M'QUAID OF ST. JAMES CHURCH DEAD

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor William P. McQuaid, rector of St. James Church, Harrison avenue, died shortly after noon today at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. He was seventy one years old.

Right Rev. William P. McQuaid was in his seventy-first year. He was born in Scotland. When he attained manhood he decided to enter the priesthood and with that end in view entered All Hallows College, Dublin, Ireland.

He was ordained in 1870, and shortly afterwards came to the United States. After some years as curate in different parishes Father McQuaid was appointed pastor at Rockland, which pastorship he held until he was placed at the head of St. James Church, Harrison avenue, Boston.

This church is famous in the history of Catholicity in Boston from the fact that from among its priests were chosen four New England bishops, the late Bishop O'Reilly of the Springfield diocese, the late Bishop Healy of the Portland diocese, Bishop Harkins of the diocese of Providence, and the late Archbishop Williams.

Father McQuaid was a man of strong personality and of affable ways which made him as popular with his own people as he was respected by all classes of citizens. As a reward for his zeal and fidelity as a pastor, he was, some years ago, raised to the dignity of Monsignor by the late Pope Leo XIII.

SCHOOLS PURE FOOD POWER, SAYS CASSIDY

Mr. Cassidy writes today of the immense power for the promulgation of pure food ideas which lies dormant in the school children of the city. Domestic science is taught in several of the public schools. How much more important, Mr. Cassidy believes, would be a practical course in pure food work by which the future housewives of the city could be taught to learn practical facts of real benefit to themselves and their families in after life.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

Without making any accusations against the performance of their duties by city and State Boards of Health, it is almost axiomatic that political interference with the proper performance of duties by these public officials.

First of all, I believe that any official who accepts office presumably to protect the health of the public and afterwards refuses, for fear of offending or injuring others in a business way, to do what he knows he ought to do, is worse than the food doper who makes illegal and dishonest profits by adulterating and poisoning the nation's food supply.

I have always maintained that one genuine food official could accomplish wonders in cleaning up a city or state by a rigid performance of the duties of his office.

Unfortunately human nature is such that those kinds of food or health officials are few and far between. But there is a way of supplementing their neglect and of making them, almost against their will, do what they are expected to do by the very virtue of their office.

Children Can Help.

We have in this country an army of 15,000,000 school children mobilized only last week for the defense of the republic. There is no more practical way they can take part in that defence than by safeguarding the health of the republic's unpure food, more than any other one failing, is responsible for ill health.

What more practicable idea than that these school children, especially the girls, be given practical demonstrations of the viles and dishonest practices of the food doper?

About a year ago in the William Penn High School in Philadelphia, I had the honor of showing 2,000 school children how to detect bad eggs. During the time I was addressing the school, perhaps the children lost sense of the frills and furbelows pertaining to different isms and ologies.

But I feel safe in asserting the girls of that school got more real education fitting them for future occupations as housewives than they obtained in the same amount of time before or since.

Which brings me back to the enforcement of the present food laws. If the school children of this city were taught how to intelligently apply how to avoid being put sound, wholesome food drinks, how to select a diet containing the life giving and health preserving minerals, in a word, how to live and insist upon pure food, all the malfeasance in office or derelict health officials would be checked and pure food would be a reality.

Has Great Possibilities.

Walter E. Rauger, commissioner of public schools in Rhode Island, has great possibilities. Mr. Rauger says, "To share in public endeavor for better things is an important lesson for the school children."

Why not pure food work as an admirable channel for the expression of this school citizenship? Surely nothing is more important than the public health. Would not a course in pure food be at least as important as some of the useless courses now taught in the public schools?

2 DEAD, 10 HURT, IN 8 BAY STATE AUTO CRASHES

Two men are dead today, eight girls and women and two men injured as the result of eight automobile accidents, five of which occurred in Greater Boston.

Douglas Thomas of Baltimore was scheduled for appearance in the Spencer Court today at the trial of Lewis Almond, his chauffeur, charged with reckless driving and assault in causing the collision at Spencer as a result of which Arthur Greenblad of Paterson, N. J., was killed, his wife severely injured, and two cousins of the dead man, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Greenblad of Newark, N. J., slightly hurt when thrown into the brush by the roadside.

Arthur Mercier of Southbridge was badly cut on the head, Mrs. Rose Boucher sustained a broken rib and severe contusions to the body and Miss Mary Boucher was badly bruised as a result of a head-on collision between two automobiles speeding around a dangerous curve on the Lowell road in Brandon.

Three Children Hurt.

Two auto accidents, occurring within a quarter of a mile each other and about an hour apart, on Washington street near the Westwood Dedham line resulted in serious injury to three children.

Eleven-year-old Mabel Hoss and her three-year-old sister Gertrude were struck by a machine on the Westwood side of the line when they ran into the road from behind some cattle boxes at the curb. Mabel's right leg was broken and she sustained probable internal injuries. Gertrude's right arm was broken and she was hurt about the head.

A few yards away on the Dedham side of the line and in the south bound car Islington, six year-old Marjorie Likerton stepped from in front of her house at No. 131 Washington street directly into the path of an auto owned by Francis O. Winslow of Norwood, and which, driven by the chauffeur was bound for Boston. The child was picked up suffering from a broken hip.

While crossing Hancock street Quincy near Revere road, Miss Anna Brogan of Grasile avenue, Quincy, was struck by an automobile owned by Asa Quincy Electric Light Company and driven by John Smith. She was treated by Dr. W. H. Blanchard, who found her suffering from painful bruises.

Aged Cyclist Dead.

While riding a bicycle on River street, near Huntington avenue, Hyde Park, George W. Hanchett, sixty eight years old, of No. 913 River street, Hyde Park, was struck by an automobile. He died early today at his home from a fractured skull.

The automobile was owned by Daniel A. Field of No. 68 Arlington street and driven by Tyle F. Abbott, twenty-four, of No. 8 Dana avenue, both of Hyde Park. Abbott will be arraigned today in the Hyde Park court on a charge of manslaughter.

Does a Nagging Wife Drive One to Drink?

Or Is a Drinking Man Father to Nagging?

DELANCO, N. J. Sept. 19. What do you think?

Does a nagging wife drive a husband to drink? Or does a drinking husband drive a wife to nagging?

Martin H. Schlicher, local police station officer was a special invited speaker before the annual convention of the Burlington County W. C. T. U. held in the local Methodist Episcopal church. In the course of his address with pictures and phonograph he pointed out:

That the drink down fall in the fact that nagging wives make their husbands so unhappy that they seek to drown their sorrows in drink.

A woman delegate immediately arose and stated that was the first time she ever heard a policeman preach temperance from the standpoint of the wife's duty to her husband.

Then was created a tempest which is still unsettled here.

TARIFF BOARD FOR FREE FLOUR AND WHEAT

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Both wheat and flour will go on the free list, it is announced today as the result of an agreement reached by the Democratic members of the tariff conference committee.

But a duty of ten cents a bushel will be assessed against wheat imported from a country levying a duty on American wheat and a duty of forty-five cents per barrel against flour imported under like conditions. The House had put a straight duty of ten cents per bushel on wheat and had free-listed flour, with a countervailing duty of ten per cent ad valorem.

The agreement established a precedent, which, it is understood, will be followed in other cases in imposing countervailing duties.

It is expected that the conference will approve of countervailing duty of 10 cents on potatoes, which both Houses have put on the free list, and that the countervailing duty on wood pulp, put in by the House, and later stricken out by the Senate, may also be adopted.

ANNA HELD AND ZIEGFELD WILL REMARRY

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—According to intimate friends of Miss Anna Held and Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., a reconciliation between the two has taken place and a remarriage will follow next month. The news became known following a meeting Wednesday evening, when Miss Held was entertained by her former husband at a dinner party.

Miss Held secured a divorce on January 9 of this year. The evidence was not made public. She did not make any demand for alimony.

The reconciliation was not entirely unexpected, for a few weeks ago Mr. Ziegfeld received from Miss Held a telegram saying that she was ready to make friends.

You lift a load like this every morning

Perhaps you think you walk so little that it doesn't matter if the heels of your shoes are made of armor-plate leather, fastened with iron nails.

Suppose you walk down to your store or office—only a quarter of a mile. You take at least 440 steps in this short walk. You lift your entire weight with each step. If you weigh 150 pounds you lift the total of 66,000 pounds—33 tons—the weight of a loaded freight car.

EVERY ounce of this great weight must come down on your heels, as you pound along over the flinty pavements. Do you think it is good for your sensitive nervous system to undertake such a tremendous task with heels shod with hard leather and metal?

Remember that every step means a shock—when your weight strikes upon your heel the impact is carried directly to your spine; upward to the base of your brain; outward through every nerve in your body.

O'Sullivan's Heels of new, live rubber absorb the shock and relieve you of the strain. They are invisible cushions of springy rubber which last twice as long as leather. They give you an easy, light, graceful stride and the erect carriage and habit of deep breathing which naturally go with a step from which the burden and strain have been removed.

As a measure of comfort and health you need O'Sullivan's Heelson all your shoes. They cost but 50 cents a pair, attached, at all shoemakers. Some shoe manufacturers put them on your shoes before they leave the factory. All shoemakers and shoe dealers will attach them to your shoes when you buy them, or at any other time. Or, if you prefer, send us 35c in stamps, with a tracing of your heel, and we will mail you a pair.

What Well-Dressed Men Will Wear This Fall

A Brief Word About the New Styles, and About the Greater Stock and Broader Service You'll Find Here

The coats this fall are of medium length—a trifle shorter than heretofore, if anything, and a little more form-fitting—with or without vent in back, soft roll lapels, and sleeves a shade narrower, many with cuffs. Both single and double-breasted models are correct and patch pockets are much in evidence. Vests for young men are snug fitting and high cut, either with or without collar. Trousers are cut straight, with cuff or not, as preferred.

In colorings, about the only real innovation is an occasional quiet green. But in the patterns there's much that's new. Fine checks—lineal descendants of the club check—are plentiful and attractive. Pencil stripes are in great favor and range from the wide-apart single-thread effects down to the finest, neatest banjo stripes.

We've countless models in all the new patterns—styles for the young man, the near young, the would-be young, etc., down to the ultra-conservative. Both extremes a-plenty and the happy medium in superabundance. No matter what your age or taste, we can give you just what you want at just the price you want to pay.

With greater value-giving more pronounced, a wider range of styles and sizes and a far greater stock than ever before, this Live Store is now ready to break its own past records just as it has broken the records of all similar stores.

ENGLISHMEN FEARED BY AMERICANS IN BIG OPEN GOLF TITLE TOURNAMENT

ENGLISH STILL LEAD IN BIG GOLF TOURNEY

COUNTRY CLUB, Brookline, Sept. 19. — With many of the contenders in with their third round scores in the United States golf championship the English crack were still holding sway this afternoon with totals of 225 for the three rounds played. The heavy going did not seem to bother them to any extent, and Ray was able to pick up in the two strokes he had on Vardon and gained yesterday as the former was so hard hit after his morning.

Closely pressing the visitors for first honors were Walter Hagen of Rochester and J. M. Barnes of Taunton, the latter totaling 227 with his morning round of 78, which should not have been several strokes better. Barnes had a 144 to finish at the head of the list this morning, but required one stroke more than this at the sixteenth and seventeenth and two more at the home hole, which seemed to be his bugbear. Yesterday Barnes had four over 5's at the home hole to be in latter to Vardon and Ray, but instead took six for a drive that left him but a pitch to the green.

Greens Were Very Soft.

Naturally the greens were very soft and to this is very little if any additions stroke for Vardon. At the short tenth his second shot left him with a five foot putt. This will settled into a cup much below par shot and he did not have much on the putting green to get the three. He missed this stroke and took a four.

J. H. Taylor had a good chance to take down some of the week's score this morning but a poor six which he got at the fifteenth on getting a missed putt of eight inches for a five and a 78 at the home hole gave him a 77.

Edward Loving, Atlanta, who paired with Vardon, led his worthy rival all the way around the course this morning. Had he holed a few reasonable putts he would have been close to the lead of 70 for his 75 in the morning was a very perfect exhibition of putting, and a condition to take one of the leading money prizes.

Loving's score was the best of the south starter and was reached by anyone on with the wet soggy condition of the course. Taking advantage of every shot that was to be had in the fairway, Loving was able to get his second on the par four fifth hole in two and fourth hole in three, getting a 5 and a 4. The seven came in the result of a second shot that caught a trap. He was on the green in 4 and had two three putts. At the next he holed out his mashie approach for 20 yards, but was short of the flag and hopped into the cup on the brook.

Willie Maguire did this same thing at the sixth yesterday afternoon.

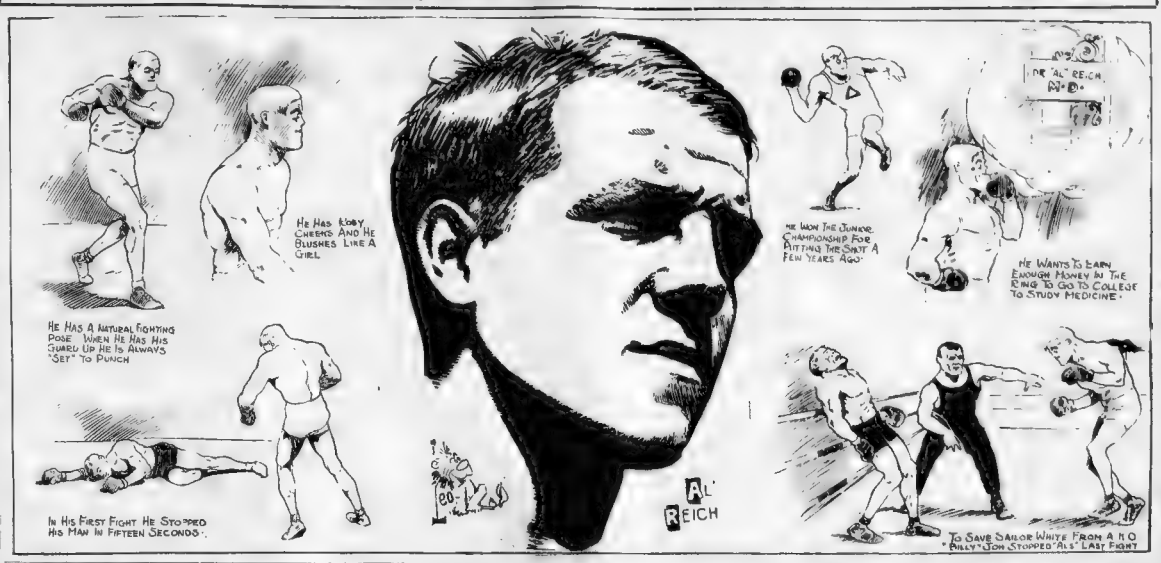
Rain Puts Off Lowell and Hartford Game

HARTFORD, Ct., Sept. 19.—Owing to a steady rain which has fallen since midnight last night the third game of the post season series between Hartford and Lowell was called off. The teams will play here tomorrow.

"Irish Paddy" Wins by K. O.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Paddy Cullin, the Irish featherweight champion, knocked out Joe Daw of New York in the seventh round of a scheduled ten round bout at the National A. C., Brooklyn.

AL REICH, THE NEWEST "WHITE HOPE"



Al Reich and Morris to Battle Tonight

Former Amateur Heavyweight Champion Engages in His Second Bout as Professional

By JACK CONWAY.

AL REICH, the former amateur heavyweight champion, who engage in his second bout as a professional in Madison Square Garden, New York this evening. The big "white hope" will be pitted against Carl Morris in a ten-round contest, and is confident that he will be returned the winner.

Reich made his debut in the ranks of the money makers last week, when he fought Sailor White in New York. White is a rough, tough fellow who has been fighting for a number of years, and Reich, however, stopped the tar in five rounds.

The former amateur title holder is a well built young man. He is over six feet tall and when he clashed with White he scaled at 211 pounds. Reich is put together solid and carries his weight well.

New York boxing critics who have seen him perform declare that he is one of the most promising of the white hopes. He knows more about boxing at this stage of his career than was possessed by any of the other leading white heavyweights who ever first started boxing as professionals.

Morris is certain to give Reich a rugged battle tonight. He was one of the first of the white hopes. The Oklahoman gained started fighting soon after Jeffries had been conquered by Johnson at Reno. He got several severe knocks during his first year and a half in the ring but has been performing well of late.

BROOKS AND DUFFY CLASH.

THE gardner fathers have arranged another good card for their club in Lowell for this evening. Freddy Duffy, the clever Jamaica Plain lightweight, will clash with Terry Brooks of New York in the main bout of twelve rounds. These two boys should put up an interesting mill.

Duffy and Brooks are boxers of an opposite type. Duffy is a fast, elusive boxer and usually relies on his speed in order to win his ring bouts. He can also land a fair punch.

Brooks, on the other hand, is a slugger pure and simple. He is a lightweight but can hit as hard as many of our middleweights. Terry has put up some good battles in New England rings and believes that he will knock out Duffy. The latter, however, is certain that he will breeze in a winner.

An eight-round semi-final and two preliminary bouts have also been arranged.

GALLANT WOULD BOX DUNDEE.

IF Johnny Dundee, the New York lightweight, is really anxious to box Gilbert Gallant, the ruxxed little Chelsea lightweight, is willing to accommodate him. In discussing the matter today, Alex McLean, Gallant's manager, said:

"Gallant is open to meet Dundee in this city at 133 pounds at five o'clock on the afternoon of the day set for the match. Dundee was offered a chance to battle the Chelsea boy at the Athletic Club next Tuesday evening, but turned the offer down. He evidently has great respect for Gallant's fighting ability.

"I have arranged a series of bouts which will keep Gallant busy for some time. He will open his ring campaign in Lowell a week from tonight, when he clashes with Gervey Hayes. On October 4 Gallant will exchange punches with either Matty Baldwin or Johnny Dohan in Manchester, N. H., while he will meet some good lightweight in Worcester on October 9. Gallant is now training in Chelsea, and when he enters the squared enclosure he will be able to give a good account of himself against the best of them.

"Gallant is one of the strongest lightweights in the country, and I am sure that he will be able to hold his own with the leading 133-pound boxers in the country after he has had a little more experience."

WANT 135-POUND WEIGHT.

DUNDEE by the way, will never be able to secure a bout with Leach Cross or Tommy Murphy unless he agrees that the weight for the match be 135 pounds. Cross is a big lightweight and does not care to reduce to 133 pounds, while Murphy also likes to perform at 135 pounds.

SNYDER HOPES TO SUCCEED.

BENNY SNYDER, who won the championship in the 105-pound class at the national boxing championships hopes to make a good record as a professional. Snyder is under the management of Eddie Mack, who believes that the Rox bury boy will cause considerable trouble for New England's bantam weights during the coming Fall and Winter.

POWERS TO RE-ENTER RING.

DAVE POWERS, the Malden welterweight, intends to re-enter the ring soon. Powers advances the information that nothing would please him better than a bout with Terry Brooks. These men have fought three times. The first two bouts were draws, while Brooks won the third waltz by a knockout in five rounds.

EASY TO BE CHAMPION.

WE are seriously thinking of signing for a bout with Jack Johnson. Johnson will undoubtedly run the affair off. We will then box a few rounds with an imaginary opponent, a la Freddy Welsh and after the "battle" claim the world's heavyweight championship.

REICH HAS THE MAKE-UP OF A REAL FIGHTER

By RIGHT CROSS

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—A tall Norse youth with long muscular arms and a chest like a drum is a new and faint cheering light on the gloomy sky line of the "white hope" situation.

His name is Al Reich and on his first appearance as a professional box fighter he knocked Sailor White "dead" in five rounds. Sailor White is no pushover of merit and renown, but he is an experienced earthorse of the average white hope type and the experts at the ringside figured it a great boost for a novice to score a knockout over anyone in his first professional battle.

His build is all that could be desired. He stands a foot 1 inch from the soles of his shoes to the part of his hair, and every inch of it was stripped of fat, low until low solid are, when he moved the smallest one a coil and ripple under his sun tanned skin like a snake under a blanket.

Weighs 211 Pounds.

He weighed 211 pounds, and every ounce of it was loose and grizzle and bone. And most of it was between the waist line and the neck as is ever the case with a real fighting man. His legs have a long, smooth taper which promises speed, and in this case the promise is fulfilled.

But the connoisseurs in the upper tiers of seats in Madison Square Garden, looking in the face to see a real fighter or remembering the Fitzsimmons of Bombardier Wells in general make up his to not much like the rangy but rawboned Englishman. This slowness of appearance was somewhat offset by a steady eye of the light fighting, although this was by no means to the gallery savants and they judged that by the hair until in the next few seconds he flew at the sailor with a wicked short left swing.

He Surprised Crowd

White got up badly shaken and staggered back under cover. The action surprised the crowd by keeping his head fairly well and instead of throwing his famous shoulder punches, Reich put his left into the ribs and then came to his knees with a right to the jaw.

Since experience is what he confidently needs, it is just as well for Reich that the fight went five rounds. It will help him and temper the ardor of coolness. He showed that he has a head, the build and strength and natural aptitude. Also a stiff punch of average kind, and above all, he can box.

Burke-Rothwell Draw.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Sept. 19.—Willie Burke of New Haven and Willie Rothwell of Brooklyn battled to a rattling fast rounds to a draw at the Y. M. C. A.

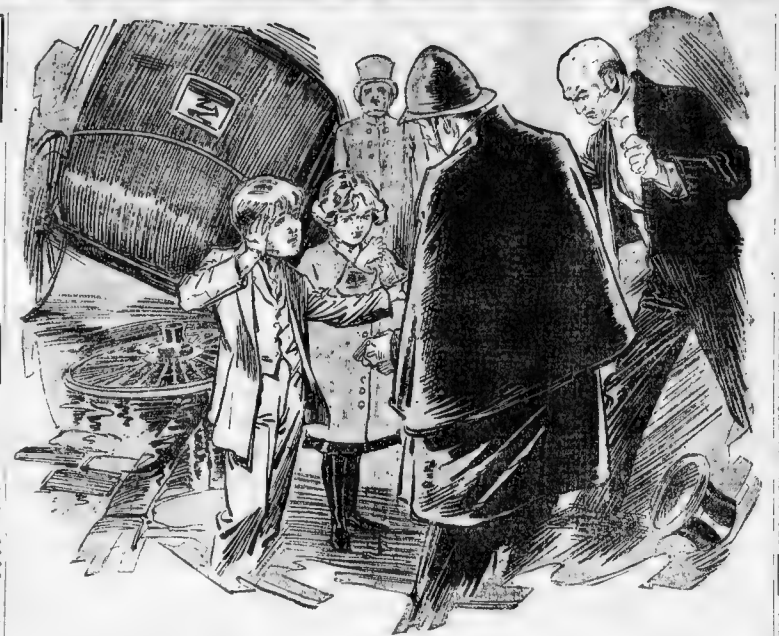
THE KING OF DIAMONDS

BY LOUIS TRACY

A THRILLING STORY OF A MODERN MONTE CRISTO



THROUGH THE CROWD OF FRIGHTENED SERVANTS, AUGMENTED BY A FEW DARING PEDESTRIANS, A BURLY POLICEMAN, GIGANTIC IN WATERPROOF OVERALLS, WAS ADVANCING WITH OFFICIAL BLUSTER. "WHAT HAS HAPPENED?" HE DEMANDED. "IS ANYBODY HURT?" THE MAN ANSWERED: "MY HORSES WERE STARTLED BY THE STORM. I JUMPED OUT AND WAS ENDEAVORING TO EXTRICATE MY NIECE WHEN THIS WRETCHED BOY GOT IN THE WAY." "UNCLE," PROTESTED THE GIRL, "YOU CLOSED THE DOOR ON ME, AND THE BOY"— "SHUT UP!" HE GROWLED. CURT. "GO INSIDE THE HOUSE!"

You Can Begin This Great Story Today by Reading This First

PHILIP ANSON, a boy of fifteen, of fine [illegible] and [illegible] an orphan and [illegible]

The story opens with the death of Philip's father and [illegible] year after the death of her husband [illegible] a boy named Will and a girl [illegible]

Rich relatives were deserted by the family in their hour of need, and when Philip's mother [illegible] pulling in Devon. He has [illegible] brother's letters and [illegible] he was [illegible] to get [illegible] Maxwell & Son, [illegible] interest in [illegible] Docks, near London.

Now Read On

[illegible] the London [illegible] of [illegible] the social life of London was paralyzed for the [illegible] Dinner parties, dances [illegible] fashionable [illegible] functions of every description [illegible] were all [illegible] away from offices and shops, those were alike [illegible] leave the charmed circle of the Seven Dials, were ruthlessly hidden [illegible] with the awesome forces of [illegible] made small racket in the streets.

All [illegible] were [illegible] the drivers of cabs [illegible] were unable to make progress. [illegible] at first attempt to restrain their [illegible] animals from adding the havoc of blind charges through the streets to the [illegible] confusion caused by the warring elements. Telegraph and telephone [illegible] Sunday not only useless but dangerous, and the suburban train [illegible] were soon hopelessly plunged into a [illegible] from which it was not extricated [illegible] midnight.

So great [illegible] storm, and the wide spread [illegible] rain, that the sudden cessation of [illegible] appear at 8 o'clock caused more prayers of thankfulness to be uttered in the [illegible] than had been heard for many a day. But worse remained [illegible] for the lightning had been appalling. It literally lurid, but harmless. At 10 o'clock the storm raged again, this time without the preliminary downfall of rain, and the lightning, though less sensational in appearance was demonic in effect, levying a toll on human lives, causing fires and general damage to property, accounts of which filled many columns of the news papers next morning. This second outburst was succeeded by heavy and continuous rain. At 11, hour when the theatres emptied their [illegible] audiences into the streets London were its normal rain sodden aspect. It was not until the following day that people fully understood the magnitude and terrific results of the later display.

About a quarter to eight, while the first storm was at its height [illegible] and pair dashed into a fashionable West End square and pulled up outside a mansion next in the stereotyped mould of the early Victorian period. The horses, overfed and underworked, had been rendered frantic by the drive through the park from the further west. Fortunately they knew this halting place or the coachman would never have succeeded in stopping them. As it was, they sweated white with fear and the footman, shouting at the occupants of the carriage that he could not attend to the door, ran to their heads after giving a vigorous tug at the house bell.

THE ACCIDENT

A boy, tall and thin and scantily attired for such weather, who had taken shelter in the area portico of the mansion, ran forward to offer his services at the carriage door. A bundle of evening papers [illegible] a piece of sacking, somewhat impaired the use of his left hand, and, as it happened, in his right [illegible] which he had [illegible] and of the

Before he could turn the handle the carriage door opened from the inside. A man sprang out.

"Get out of the way!" he said impatiently, and the newsboy obeyed, glad that he had not followed his first impulse and flung [illegible]

A vivid flash of lightning made the horses rear and plunge.

"Look sharp, Iff," cried the stranger, in no over-genial tone. "Gather your wraps and jump out. On a night like this those nervous brutes"——

A peal of thunder that rattled the windows interrupted him. The two animals reared and backed with one accord. The plucky footman, hanging onto the crossbars of the bits, was lifted off his feet and banged violently against the pole. He was forced to let go, and fell, staggering backward some yards before he dropped. There was a smash of iron and wood, and the near hind wheel of the carriage jammed against the curb. A slight scream came from the interior. Certain that the vehicle would turn over instantly, the man who had alighted slammed the door and sprang clear. In doing so he tripped over the newsboy and fell heavily on the pavement. The boy, quicker to note that the breaking of the pole had given a momentary respite, rushed into the roadway, throwing away both precious bundle and still more precious stock of unsold papers.

He wrenched the other door open and shouted.

"This way, madam! Quick!"

"Madam," was quick. She sprang right into his arms, and proved to be a girl of twelve or thereabouts, dressed all in white and wrapped in an ermine cloak.

Over we [illegible] the carriage with a fearful crash. The [illegible] man managed to jump from the box into the roadway. He retained the reins and whip in his grasp, and n[illegible] losing his temper, lashed the struggling [illegible] unsparingly. This cowed them, and they ceased their antics.

The boy and [illegible] girl found themselves [illegible] on the sidewalk, close to the [illegible]

"You have saved my life!" said the girl, sweetly, and without any trace of the nervousness which might naturally be expected after such a narrow escape from a serious accident.

The boy noted that her eyes were large and blue, that she wore a great shining ornament in her hair, and that she appeared to be dressed in somewhat fanciful manner, though the big cloak she wore concealed the details.

The door of the mansion opened and servants came running out.

Suddenly the boy received a violent blow on the side of the head.

AN APPEAL

"Confound you!" shouted the man, who had fallen on the pavement, "why didn't you get out of the way when I told you"

The boy astounded by such recognition of his timely help, made no reply, but the girl protested vehemently.

"Oh, uncle," she cried, "why did you strike him? He got me out of the carriage just before it turned over. He did, indeed!"

Another vivid flash of lightning illumined the scene. It lit up the group with sterling brilliancy. The boy, still somewhat shaken by the vicious blow, was nevertheless able to see the pale, handsome, big dissipated features of his enraged assailant, whose evening dress and immaculate linen were soiled by the black mud of the pavement. The girl, dainty and fairy-like, a little maid of aristocratic type, and of a beauty that promised much in later years, was distressed now and almost tearful.

Through the crowd of frightened servants, augmented by a few daring pedestrians, a burly policeman, gigantic in waterproof overalls, was advancing with official bluster.

"What has happened?" he demanded. "Is anybody hurt?"

The man answered:

"My horses were startled by the storm. I jumped out and was endeavoring to extricate my niece when this wretched boy got in the way."

"Uncle," protested the girl, "you closed the door on me, and the boy——"

"Shut up!" he growled, curtly. "Go inside the house!"

But the niece shared with him at least one characteristic. She possessed the family temper.

"I will not go away and [illegible] Things which are [illegible] Listen to me, Mr Policeman Lord Vanstone did close the door because he thought the carriage would turn over on top of him. For some reason the accident did not happen immediately, and the boy ran round to the other side and helped me out just in time."

"Confound the brat! I think he was the real cause of the whole affair. Why was he hiding in my doorway?

Lord Vanstone was [illegible] than ever by the girl's obstinate defense of her rescuer and her insistence on his own securing cowardice [illegible]

"I was not hiding. I only took shelter from the storm. I tried to help you because the footman was afraid to hold the horses. I do not claim any credit for simply opening a door and helping the young lady to alight, but I [illegible] my dinner and my papers in doing so."

Every one experienced a sense of surprise at hearing the boy's eloquent diction. The policeman was puzzled. He instantly understood the facts [illegible] but even [illegible]

"You do not belong any [illegible] him [illegible] he said.

But his lordship deigned [illegible] told the coachman to arrange for the removal of the carriage, dragged his niece by the arm and led her, still protesting, into the house.

The policeman saw the bundle of papers scattered over the roadway, and near them the partly eaten bun. After a search at his garments he produced a penny.

"Here," he said to the boy. "Buy another bun and be off. It's a good job for you the young lady spoke up the way she did."

"She merely told the truth. That man was a liar"

Refusing the proffered penny, the boy turned on his heel. The policeman looked after him

A QUEER KID

"That's a queer kid," he thought, "talked like a regular young gent. I wonder why he is selling papers. Poor lad! He lost a bob's worth at least, and small thanks he got for it."

Canopus and Sirius

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

"A Australian friend writes that Canopus is more [illegible] than Sirius. Please state if this is true. In what part of the world is it visible? Has its parallax been accurately determined?"

A [illegible] [illegible] that would [illegible] in error. The results of that instrument of precision, the meridian [illegible] are that Sirius is seven-tenths of a magnitude brighter than Canopus, which only reaches that Sirius is brighter than any other star.

Seen [illegible] Canopus is visible from all that portion of the world south of [illegible] latitude 7 degrees, since its declination [illegible] 53 is the complement of it.

It therefore never rises above the south horizon of any point 37 degrees north. The latitude of this observatory is 34 degrees 17 minutes, hence Canopus rises only nearly 3 degrees above the watery wastes in the Pacific sea. Its low altitude makes it much fainter than [illegible] Sirius, as the light must traverse layers of dust and water vapor near the earth's surface. Still it is magnificent, especially when [illegible] a [illegible] ocean surface.

Lord Canopus has no parallax that the highest power telemicrometer that can be made are able to measure. This is one of the most overwhelming facts within the entire range of human experience.

[illegible] to [illegible] that if one goes to Canopus with the most powerful telescopic search-lights and looks back this way he sees [illegible] the entire [illegible] of [illegible] the earth [illegible] and [illegible] in a minute point [illegible] I am sorry to say [illegible] some [illegible] may be had of the immensity of the universe by thinking of this fact during each spare minute. Better to so think than to waste the precious moments

The Head Waitress

By HANK

"WHERE'S Mr. Flaker?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe l'Enfant as he noticed the absence of the genial manager.

"He's on his vacation," she replied. Pretty soft for some guys. You just come back from yours, didn't you?"

"Yes, Louise" said the Steady Customer "For one painful week I traveled on the water in a motor boat with my friend Jimmy.'

"Did it always [illegible]" asked the Head Waitress

"Most always," replied the Steady Customer "You see we had a good engineer on board You needn't ask who he was Modesty would prevent my replying.'

"Sure, you always did hate yourself" said the Head Waitress "I was in a motor boat once myself. The engine behaved as if it had enough presumption, and hesitated every now and then I let you do the figuring on whether or not you can afford creamed chicken on toast or browned hash But say, all joking aside, you want to stop writing about Mr Flaker in the paper [illegible] of the papers was speaking to him about it the other day, and said it looked as if he was getting too familiar with the [illegible]

"But's too bad," said the Steady Customer, "if they had more managers like Mr. Flaker they'd have to turn away [illegible] crowds. There's nothing that cheers any one up like walking into a place like this and seeing somebody wearing a genial expression. Why, I often take an extra piece of pie just to be able to exchange a few more cheerful words with him Who's the new manager?

"That's Mr. Sawyer" said the Head Waitress "He's a very nice man, too That's one thing I like about Mrs d'Enfant, she always picks out real gents for managers "That's what I call having perspicuity."

"That's too much for me," groaned the Steady Customer, "I suppose you mean perspicacity, but gimme me my neck quick, I feel faint

"Louise is getting too high brow for me," said the Steady Customer to Marie, the cashier. "She tried to say perspicacity just now, and even the beans turned cold."

"Perspicacity in Indiana, where I come from, is a very ordinary word," replied Marie loftily "Very ordinary. I'm surprised at you This way out

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SOMETIMES MOTHERS DON'T KNOW

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen years of age and in love with a young man twenty-two years old. We are both Swedish. Can you tell me how I can find out if he loves me, as my mother says he doesn't. GERDA.

I AM satisfied that love is a little secret mothers sometimes are the last to suspect. For this reason your mother's opinion should not distress you.

If he loves you he will tell you. Don't try to force the avowal, don't even put yourself in an expectant attitude. Be on losing his sympathetic friend, and some time soon, I am sure, he will awaken to the realization that life is not worth while without you.

CERTAINLY NOT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man twenty-nine years old and am deeply in love with a young girl seventeen years old, and I know my love is returned. I am earning a good salary and have no bad habits. I have asked this girl to marry me and she has accepted, but do you think the difference in our age is too great? S W M

YOU are not a day too old for her DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

There is just enough difference to make you more considerate of her and to give her a greater respect for you.

DR. CAMERON bowed his head.

"Well, Mr. Gryce made a note of these, and of some other things you said at that time, and I would be obliged to you if you would glance over them to refresh your mind and prepare yourself for something I am going to say"

"But"

"I know you are suffering and that it will be a kindness to you to cut short your expense, but the words are 'but' enough. Read them Dr Cameron, read them." And he thrust the paper into the doctor's hand

But though the latter looked at it with great earnestness, he evidently received no impression from the words before him, and the inspector feeling this, took the paper away again, saying

"You shall see it later; it will perhaps be better for me now to tell you that from the facts and arguments you adduced at our last meeting, we have come to the conclusion that Genevieve Gretorex was not accountable for the death that took place in her room. That you did not [illegible] nor [illegible] by its use, that she was a victim, and that the woman you married"

He stopped, eyed the doctor who was trembling like an aspen and glowing like a being suddenly lifted out of Hell into Heaven

"You never got that from any arguments I used," cried the doctor "You have seen Molesworth and he"

But the inspector interposed gravely "Yes, we have seen Molesworth, but he added little to the knowledge we had. No, no, it was your admissions which proved to us that Genevieve Gretorex is innocent. And yet"—— he went on, checking the doctor's joy with a sudden look, "we cannot offer you our congratulations, for with this conviction comes the painful alternative that she is only so because it was not the subtlest fate and prototype of your betrothed bride that perished in that hour, but the bride herself, and that the woman you call your wife, and who now lies under the surveillance of the police, is not the elegant and fastidious heiress of Mr Gretorex, but—bear up, Cameron; there is hope for you in all this—the able, ardent and aspiring Mildred Farley"

The Last Hope

THE blow had fallen; it had been long delayed, but it had come at last, and for a moment Dr Cameron [illegible] Then he recovered himself and said, though somewhat faintly:

"This is surmise on your part; you have no proof that such is the fact?"

"No actual proof, no; but plenty of what you might call circumstantial. The fact that Mrs. Cameron has not been allowed to write a word since her marriage, is one"

"You see it is not a question to be answered in an instant," remarked that gentleman, with sympathetic earnestness "I do not attempt to answer it, I shall not When Genevieve Mrs Cameron has reached a condition in which it will be safe for one to put such a question, I will ask her to tell me the truth and she will do it"

"You think so? Well, that might do if it were yourself only who must be satisfied; but, unhappily, there is the police, and I do not think we should feel the question fully settled by this means"

"Not if she acknowledged she was Mildred Farley?"

"Not if she acknowledged she was Mildred Farley. It might be a ruse on the part of Genevieve Gretorex to escape from what she must consider Genevieve Gretorex's anomalous position. A woman who could do what this woman did, be she Genevieve or Mildred, has passed beyond the bounds where her mere word may be relied upon."

The doctor knew it

"Then what would you do?" asked he. The inspector looked at him gravely, and saw that his anxiety was not to be tampered with and remarked.

"You have forgotten that Dr Molesworth must know whose body he carried off in his phaeton."

Dr. Cameron had been sitting; he immediately bounded to his feet

"Ha," he cried, "Molesworth! Let us go to him. He will tell me"—— But at this point his enthusiasm paled. A thought had struck him. "Molesworth did great things for the woman who married me," he declared. "Would he have done so much for Mildred Farley? Must it not have been Genevieve Gretorex whose helplessness he pitied, and for whose safety and content he was willing to incur the risk and endure the not too agreeable sensations of carrying a dead body out of a house, in his arms?"

But the inspector shook his head. "I am not so sure of that," he rejoined. "Some men will do more for friendship than for love Besides, a woman who had deceived his [illegible] from a marriage with him to unite herself to another would not awaken the same sympathy in him as Mildred Farley might."

"You have seen him; you have talked with him; he has confessed to me"

"No; Dr. Molesworth would not answer the questions last night. He was sick, or appeared so, very sick I should say"

Dr. Cameron thought of the look he had last seen upon his new friend's face, and wondered if out of consideration for himself, Dr. Molesworth had been suppressing symptoms, which he knew were tending toward serious illness.

He was in the water, Q informed him on that coldest of cold days; and this with the privations you have suffered, may have occasioned disease. But he may also be attempting some trick upon us, and to make it appear this is not so. I think it better for you to accompany me in my next visit. Are you ready to go"

Was he not? Upon Molesworth now depended all his hope. He alone could satisfy him concerning a fact which meant everything to him. He followed the inspector with alacrity, and they proceeded at once to Mrs Silsey's house

"We are in time," the doctor's heart sank as he approached, and the very house-front looked repellant and uncommunicative "Was not Molesworth in his friend, and would he not see that a doubt like this must be settled, no matter what the consequences? He hurried forward as he reached the steps, but faltered when it came to ringing the bell. The inspector, however, did this for him, and when the door was opened, put the question which elicited this reply

"Oh, he is much worse this morning, sir The doctor we called in says he is afraid he will not last through the day"

The Unpardonable Lack

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

ANXIOUS writes me:

"I am deeply in love with a young man two years my senior, but do not care for his disposition; namely, when in company he is bashful about assisting me in putting on my wraps. Otherwise he is passable."

In other words, he is steady, industrious, of good morals, capable, agreeable, and altogether desirable. "Otherwise he is passable" may mean nothing less.

But when other girls' escorts spring nimbly forth like monkeys to adjust a wrap on a girl's shoulders, or make her feel like a queen by falling on bended knee to adjust an overshoe, this man stands bashful and ill at ease. No doubt he is so awkward and ill versed in these little arts of the cavalier that it he attempts to assist with a girl's wrap he gets it on upside down and puts the left overshoe on the right foot.

All serious crimes in the eyes of a girl who is young, very young, and who judges men as if she were still a child in a toy shop where the brightest, and never the best, appeals to her. No child selects a toy for its lasting qualities. It is a tragedy when she reaches woman's estate and acts on the same juvenile impulses in selecting a husband.

GALLANTRY'S LIMIT

Gallantry is pleasing, and the woman is never so old to whom it does not appeal. But she should learn with her years to discriminate between it as a means and as an end. It is a means to win a girl's pleasure; there are men who make it the end of all attention they pay women.

They are quick to assist a girl with her rubbers, but that requires none of the self-sacrifice which must be made to make life's pathway smooth for her feet.

They are punctilious in the adjustment of her wraps before they don their own, but this is no assurance that they will protect her from the elements if that protection incurs the sacrifice of one jot of their own comfort.

A man who is so observant of these little attentions that he keeps apace with the fashions and can adjust the most intricate of shoulder wraps without a blunder is known as a "ladies' man, in comparison with whom the man who can't tell the outside of an opera cloak from the inside, nor the downside from the up, appears the boor.

But, my dear girl, life is neither a ball nor a cloak room, and no wife ever returned broken-hearted to her father's home, or sought fierce redress in the divorce courts whose story of wrongs was based on the failure of her husband to assist her in putting on her rubbers.

ONLY ADORNMENTS

All these little arts are adornments and it is not my wish to decry them. On the contrary, I wish every man were more gallant. But lasting happiness has no more to do with them than it has to do with the suit of clothes the bridegroom wore to the altar. That he was a paragon of fashion on that great day doesn't renew the fuel of love in the years to come.

"Otherwise he is passable." My dear girl, if that means all it implies—that he is steady, honest, of good principles, intelligent, kind, industrious and true, except him the first time he offers his heart and hand.

Love has a way, all unconsciously to the man, of making the rudest of his sex the most gracious. Out of that great love for you will develop every little courtesy his manners now lack.

That is, if you do not nag him about his short-comings, trusting this work of transformation to the grace-developing power of Love.

Made the Best of It

"Yes," said a smart young man, "I used to be in the insurance business: I once got a man to take out a $10,000 policy only about a week before he happened to be killed. He was a mighty hard chap to land, too. I had a talk to him for nearly six months before I got him."

"I suppose," remarked his friend, "you regretted, after it was all over, that your persuasive powers were so good?"

"Well—er—no. I never felt sorry about it. The fact is, I made the best of a bad job by marrying the widow."

History Repeats Itself

Adam and Eve

READ the stories of love's lovers, and you know, when you finish, the history of the world! For they follow the fortunes of this old green earth from beginning to end—and what they did and said in the Garden of Eden, in the Iceland of Leif the Lucky, in the sounding halls of the Saxon kings, in the Red Palace of Duke Balthasar at Luna, in the old Southern days "before the war," they do and say just now!

And the little dialogue that links them close—across the seas and land, across the centuries of change—lovers with lovers, is just this: "NO, YOU DON'T!" "YES, I DO!" "NO, YOU DON'T LOVE ME!" "YES, I DO LOVE YOU!"

Antony and Cleopatra

Lovers have always held a certain sweet delight in scrapping about which loved each other the most, and most times it is the girl who starts something, by that pouting, "No, you don't." Perhaps it's just to hear how extravagantly and with what wonderful variations he can say the "Yes, I do." Aucassin and Nicolette, those poor Norman youngsters, quarrelled woefully over just that.

Eve pouted and a silvery tear ran over her pinky cheek while she twisted her body like a youngster saying a piece and pulled flower-heads off. And she said, "No, you don't." And Adam, at his wit's end, called the Angel at the gate to witness that he did.

Cleopatra, in a black mood, her purplish eyes aflame, crouched in her gilt and emerald throne, the purplish-red of the grape deepening in her dusky cheek, and would not look at Antony! And, in a passion cried, like just any other woman, "No, you don't!" And Antony—mad Antony—fearfully bended close to look in her face and told her in the honeyed tongue that must have been the interpreter of so reckless and tormented a love as his, "Yes, I do!"

On a park bench in Spring, Summer or Autumn—or even in Winter—you may slip up behind a girl and a fellow with the little bag of charity for the squirrels between them, and hear the same gloomy, "No, you don't!" and the fervent, "Yes, I do!"

Their Married Life

Helen Is Ill on the Rough and Foggy Trip Across the English Channel

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"BETTER eat something," advised Warren. "You'll not feel like eating on that channel boat."

"Oh, you think it's going to be rough?"—anxiously.

"Can't tell; but it's always a mean trip. Looks like it's going to be foggy, too."

Helen glanced out of the window at the low, marshy country through which they were now whirling. It had been misting when they left Paris, and now the mist had thickened to a drizzle.

"How about a piece of French melon?" suggested Warren. "That's refreshing," as Helen restlessly pushed back her plate.

"No, I can't eat on these French cars—things don't look clean."

"Well, they're a darn sight cleaner than those channel steamers. Seven years ago they were pretty punk—and they're the same old boats."

When they left the dining car and made their way back to their compartment, they found they had it to themselves.

"Since we're alone—I think I'll lie down," for Helen was almost ill from the strain of the last few days in Paris.

Last night, because it WAS the last night, they had stayed at the cafe de la Paix, watching the gay theatre crowd, until almost 2 o'clock. And when they got back to the hotel Helen had still much of her packing to do. It was 5 o'clock before she got to bed and they were up again at 7 o'clock.

"You do look played out," yawned Warren, as he settled himself in the opposite seat. "Don't feel any too well myself. Pretty strenuous week, wasn't it? Well, we'll have a good rest-up on the steamer. Why don't you take your hat off? Can't lie down comfortably that way."

HER HEAD ACHES

"I don't believe I can lie down," as she sat up wearily and smoothed her hair. "It makes my head ache worse. Is it much longer now?"

"Bout an hour and a half. We're not due till 1 o'clock. Want something to read?" dividing the week old Boston paper.

Helen glanced at the headlines. How familiar they looked. It would be good to get back. This morning she had felt depressed at leaving Paris, but now the eagerness of getting home was upon her.

Her head ached now badly in front, and she gazed restlessly out of the mist-blurred window. She was dreading the channel trip. Would she be ill? Every one complained of the English Channel and the wretched boats.

"We're getting into Dieppe now," announced Warren finally.

The train was slowing up through the straggling outskirts of a city. As they drew into the station a number of sailors came running down the platform. Warren signalled one and handed him out their baggage.

Everything was bustle and excitement. The passengers, English and French, were streaming out on the platform instructing the blue-bloused sailors about their luggage.

"Come on, let's get out of this," Warren started off toward the steamer, which lay in an inlet just beyond the station.

So this was one of the much criticised English Channel boats, thought Helen, as they made their way up the gang-plank and around the narrow deck. Everything looked unpainted and dingy, and through the open doors of the cabin came a heavy, sickening ship odor.

It was almost an hour before all the baggage was on, and they were finally off. The mist had thickened, and every now and then came the sound of some distant foghorn. The damp air was chill and penetrating.

Warren had unstrapped their rugs and wrapped them around Helen, who lay back in a steamer chair looking over the gray, roughened channel. Already she was feeling the sickening roll of the boat.

She had no inclination to move about, but Warren insisted she would be better off if she "stirred around a bit," and not give in so easy.

Clinging to his arm she walked around the wet deck, the wind flapping their raincoats. A few passengers were bundled up in chairs on the protected side, but the heavy mist had driven almost every one below.

"Come on down, let's see what the cabin's like. They've got a buffet luncheon down there."

HELEN HORRIFIED

Helen followed reluctantly, for she had had several whiffs of the odors from below. The cabin was a strange combination of a dining room and a public stateroom. Around the walls was a double row of bunks, and in the centre was a large table, from one end of which stewards were serving cold sliced ham, cold beef, tongue and salad.

"Convenient arrangement," grinned Warren. "You can eat and then lie down. Everything handy. Feel hungry?" sinking down at her with an amused smile. "Want some cold ham and salad?"

Helen shrank back in horror. "You know I couldn't eat down here!" indignantly. "Let's go back on deck. I'll be OK if I stay here any longer—the odor's something dreadful."

Helen almost ran up the stairs to get to the fresh air again.

"Are these the best boats that cross the channel?" she demanded resentfully. "Surely they're not all so old and dirty?"

Warren shrugged his shoulders. "They're all pretty rotten. That's because they've no competition. One company controls all the steamers.

They were back to their chairs now and Helen, who had "stirred about" all she could, sank into hers, while Warren wrapped the rug about her.

"Look at all those basins," she exclaimed suddenly, pointing to a long wooden bench under which were stacked a hundred or more granite pans. "What do you suppose they're for?"

Warren grinned. "Guess they need 'em when it's rough. Looks like they'd have enough to go around."

"Oh, Warren, how AWFUL! You DO say the most disgusting things!"

"Well, you wanted to know what they were for, didn't you?"

Then he buttoned up the collar of his raincoat, pulled down the rim of his soft tweed hat, refit his pipe and walked the deck, while Helen lay back and gazed over the Channel.

The clouded sky and roughened water were the same leaden gray. The mist had thickened and the foghorns were continuous.

"Dear, can't you move my chair to the other side?" she asked as Warren paced by. "I keep getting a whiff of that odor," nodding to a door just beyond, "and I don't want to see those basins either."

"Nonsense. You're too blamed finicky; besides, it's all wet over there. That's the weather side."

But Helen weakly insisted that she did not care how wet it was as long as she got away from the ship odor and the suggestive basins.

"Now that's all foolishness. Here, I'll move you up this way a bit," dragging her chair a few feet along the deck. "Now stop your fussing and take a nap—that's what you need."

As Warren strode off again the lump of resentment in her throat added to her growing feeling of nausea. Another whiff of the hot, sickening odor from below and she got up unsteadily. WAS going on the other side—if she had to drag her chair over herself.

"Where do you want it put, miss?" asked a big English sailor who had just ran down the ladder from the bridge above.

In a few moments he had her settled on the other side, and had brought a big rubber apron which he fastened over the chair. She did not mind the wind nor the mist that blew in her face.

Then she saw Warren striding angrily toward her.

"So you got over here, did you?" haughtily. "By George, you're the most stubborn, headstrong—"

"Oh, dear, don't—I—I feel so sick."

"You'll be a lot sicker if you sit here in the wet. Nough to give anybody pneumonia. Why the devil do you have to be different from every one else? Nobody's on this side." He waved down the wet, empty deck. "All the other women have sense enough to stay down in the cabin."

"You know I couldn't stand it down there! I'd be deathly sick in a minute —I MUST have air."

WARREN INSISTS

"Rot! You can get air on the other side, can't you? It isn't air you want, it's your own infernal way. Get up from there now—and I'll move you back."

"Dear, I don't WANT to go back! I'm not getting wet."

With an angry glare and a muttered oath, Warren strode off. Helen leaned back, sick, wretched and unstrung. She knew if she stood there he would not move her for fear of the rest of the voyage—and there were still three hours. And the two-hour trip back to London—he would probably not speak to her all the way.

But she felt too sick and wretched to move back now, even if she had wanted to. For over an hour she lay there alone, struggling with the dizzy sick-ness that swept over her with every roll of the boat. Not a passenger came out and if Warren was still pacing the deck he kept to the other side.

At last she could stand it no longer, and when a sailor ran by she asked him to help her back to the sheltered side. But Warren was not in sight, and only two passengers were still on deck.

It was some time before Warren appeared, and then he passed by her chair with a brief:

"How d'you feel?" condescendingly ignoring the fact that she had moved back.

"Not very well," weakly.

"Oh, you'll be all right when we get in. Only an hour more now. Cheer up!" and he strode on, leaving Helen to gaze after him tearfully.

Just About the Men

SHOULD a man announce that hereafter he intends to make a greater effort to behave, one man in ten rejoices and the remainder regard him with suspicion.

When a man has sat on a keg of powder for a time, and nothing has happened, he grows bold and lights a pipe.

There are many men whose religion doesn't fool the most credulous on earth, but they expect the Lord to swallow it.

When a man runs for office, every one in town gets in on some treat but his wife, and she is the only one who hears his grumbles when he is defeated.

A man is pleased when he learns a pretty woman admires him; never surprised.

Don't interrupt a man when he is telling his troubles. If you do he will start all over at the beginning.

If a man sits in the same room with a baby that is somnambulating in its crib, he thinks he should have credit for taking care of it.

Pay a man over fifty a compliment, and when he walks away he carries himself as if he was ten years younger.

Along about noon every man puts off till next day that wonderful thing he intends to do that will make him famous.

All that being prominent gets a man is the certainty that all the book agents will call on him.

A man's idea of religious liberty is the privilege of staying home from church.

A man can never understand why one girl's party clothes shouldn't fit another girl; they are the same just loose enough to cause alarm, and just tight enough to hang on.

After a man's married he doesn't have to be a hypocrite to make his friends smile. All he need do is to remark that he is free to do as he pleases.

SUPPOSED RIGHTLY

She was a little girl, and would ask questions.

"Ma," she began, "what does transatlantic mean?"

"Across the ocean," replied her long suffering mother very shortly.

A long silence, broken only by the irritating sound of a book's leaves being turned rapidly backwards and forwards. Then—

"Ma, does 'trans' always mean across?"

"Yes, it does—always," answered the little girl's mother, and added sternly, "but if you ask me another question I shall send you straight to bed. So remember."

The second silence was complete, and lasted quite three seconds. It was broken by a few subdued, small voices, which commented ruminatively:

"Then I suppose transparent means a cross parent."

Midway

"What did your uncle die of?"

"A slight difference of opinion."

"A fight?"

"No; the doctors disagreed, and he died before they settled their argument."

The One Way

"The doctor says I don't get enough exercise. He advised motoring for my health. What sort of a car would you buy?"

"If you want exercise don't buy one; dodge them."

Little Bobbie's Pa

BOBBIE and Pa last nite, the richest set man in this country is coming over to the hotel to have dinner with us reelite. I met him last nite over at the lodge. He rides this little town with a red ot hoss. Pa said in the short Summer that we have been waiting here I know of a dozen more places which he has fore-closed. sed Pa, life is a grand old sport, decidedly not. Pa, only reason I asked him over was so you and reality him & try to be as different soon you grow up as you can possibly be.

Gee, I like the rich old man calm. His wife was Mister Stone & wen I seen him I thought it was a good name for him. His was thin & mean looking & his eyes looked like the eyes on a big fish. He looked as if he would like to make everybody suffer. Me & Ma didenr like him & he dident like us.

I always cut at this hotel seen I am in-vited over here. We used to ex. They always call on me, you bet, banking I own the place & sum of these days I will have the landlord & his family out in the street.

Wen Mister Stone & Pa had got to-gether good & hard, I supposs Mrs. Stone & my wife was. Wen I put them sine and Mister Stone, out I am used to seeing women outed & I ain't no weaksie.

I never liked to hear a woman cry, sed Pa. I know there must have been a lot of mistakes did wen I married, but I'm sudsent half that unless I moved to sell. Pa sed. Pa was trying to keep everything down & I guess he was afraide Ma would bawl out his rich friend.

We are going to stay in your little village all of September & October, sed Ma. I think those two months in the loviest months in the year, wen all the leaves is gold and crimson & the sky seems so soft & tender.

That is the time I git most of my money, sed Mister Stone. You bet I stir after them farmers wen they sell there crops. I have to watch them up, too. Some of them will do you if you dount watch them until you git every cent and the interest. Sum of them complain because the crops is poor, but that ain't my fault. Wen I lend money is it my fault if the crops is bad? Do I make them that way? he asked Ma.

You tell 'em, but I think if you had pore way you would, sed Ma. I coud see that Ma was awful sore at Mister Stone.

I am going out hunting tomorrow with Ben Holloway, sed Pa. Maybe you wod like to come.

Not me sed Mister Stone. I don't have no time for such foolishness & I wouldent trust that Holloway nobow. He's a reglar hick and has been living out of one of my houses last Winter, he sed, & it would be just like him to fill me full of lead shot. You bet I know who my enemies are, he sed.

You must have a very ree-tentive memory, sed Ma. Dount you ever feal kind of ashamed of yourself wen you tell a lie about it? Dount get so very weather if you wouldent have been happier if you had added a little bess so hard with people.

All I want is my just due, sed Mister Stone.

Dount worry, sed ma. After you die you will get it all right. I'll see to that in comming to you. Goodnite, Mister Stone. Be sure & dount call to see us eggsuh, won't you.

She Got the Holiday

She actually desired a rather expensive shade for a gift, so she broached the subject to her husband.

"Jane," said he, impressively, "I'd like very much to give you what you want to go, and I'd be glad to let you go. I mean, of course, I'd be glad for your sake, but the fact is, I simply can't do it. Next week I've got to pay up on a note, I owe for $75, and I can't spare a penny."

Jane looked at him up and down. "Very well, Josiah," she said, "very well. If you think the man who holds your I. O. U. can make it better for you than I can, all right."

Jane got her holiday.

FORBES FAVORS DAILY BALANCE ON EXCHANGE

By B. C. FORBES.
Business Editor of the American.

In this country too much time is lost by the average business man before a stock exchange broker will buy securities for him, and the broker in turn has to settle his accounts with other brokers every day.

On the London Stock Exchange and on the Paris Bourse there is not a daily settlement of accounts, but only one every fortnight.

Among the variegated recommendations made to the Washington legislators handling the currency problem is one that American stock exchanges should adopt the fortnightly settlement plan.

Our stock exchanges should do nothing of the kind, for these plain reasons.

Daily settlements conduce to reduction of risk. Fortnightly settlements encourage extravagance speculation and entail enormous failures. Settlements made only bi-monthly entail frequent strains upon delicate money markets causing disturbance to business.

In times of stress, each fortnightly settlement is a nightmare. The whole existing machinery for effecting settlements on the New York Stock Exchange is one of the smoothest feeders to the whole financial organization. Let it alone. Reformers hurrying with zeal but possessing note brains are flopping about like newly landed flounders.

They will live by and by. Then genuine reform can be quietly undertaken by sensible people having knowledge of what they are doing.

The main thing remaining for the exchange to do is to let the public get better acquainted with it.

Forbes Attracts Worldwide Notice

Contemporary Praises American's Independence and Fearlessness.

The leading editorials in the current issue of the Expositor, devoted to finance, finance and public safety, begins by quoting from the Boston AMERICAN a recent article on the responsibility of directors, which said:

"Directors are servants of security holders, not their masters. They are elected by stockholders to serve them, not to deceive them. Too often directors forget this. Too many of them forget their responsibilities in their anxiety to turn their personal fortunes to account for their own bank accounts. Guilt must be brought home to individuals, not to corporations. Some person is responsible for every act committed. Very well, let the law pass aim at punishing the criminal now."

The Expositor proceeds: "The above appeared in a recent issue of the Boston AMERICAN, written by its able business editor, B. C. Forbes."

The chief components of Mr. Forbes' touching financial and business conditions are attracting worldwide attention."

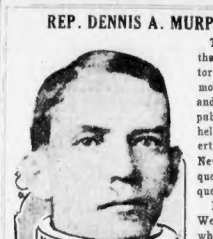
REP. DENNIS A. MURPHY OF LOWELL



This wire Democrat thought that his position as a Legislator should be used not to promote the interests of his State and his constituents, as all publicists saw it, but rather to help the law-breaking, property-destroying, man-killing New Haven monopoly in its quest for new worlds to conquer.

Mr. Murphy voted for the Western Trolley Merger Bill which gave the New Haven Railroad control over the street railways in more than half the State. This vote was in disregard of all expert railroad opinion, such as the Tax Commissioner, the Railroad Commission, the Public Franchise League, the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was a defiance of the Governor whom Mr. Murphy's party elected. It was a direct violation of that party's pledge which said: "WE ARE OPPOSED TO THE OWNERSHIP OR CONTROL OF OUR STREET RAILWAYS BY STEAM RAILROADS, AND WE BELIEVE THAT IT SHOULD GO NO FARTHER IN THIS COMMONWEALTH."

A vote for Mr. Murphy is a vote to hang the millstone of popular disapproval around the neck of David I. Walsh and the other candidates on the Democratic State ticket and to drown them in the depths of popular disapproval.

Boston Pays 62 P.C. of Whole Assessment

Metropolitan District Calls for $2,958,269.28 from City.

That the total assessments for the seven Metropolitan districts in 1913 is $4,762,361.06, and that of this amount Boston (including Hyde Park) is called to pay $2,958,269.28, or 62 per cent, is shown in the newly issued list of assessments for interest, sinking funds and maintenance of the Metropolitan districts for 1913.

According to the report, Boston contains 76.5 per cent of the taxation of the Metropolitan water area and continues 77.5 per cent of the water, so its assessment is not heavier than these figures.

Exclusive of Hyde Park, Boston is assessed for 59.5 per cent of the total on the parks, 60.9 per cent on the metropolitan and 60.8 per cent on Nantasket. For the North sewer system Boston bears 19.1 per cent of the total, and for the south sewer district 20.7 per cent. For the Charles River Basin Boston's share is 69.1 per cent.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The greatest activity will prevail in Detroit during the next two weeks in connection with the preparations for the Road Congress and the week of the Congress itself. Officials of the American Highway Association, the American Automobile Association and the Michigan State Good Roads Association, under the auspices of which the Road Congress will be held, will take up their headquarters in Detroit during the coming week. The magnitude of the Congress that an immense amount of work is required in the preparation for the event. During the week the exhibits will be installed for the most good roads exhibition to be held in the Wayne Garden and the Wayne Gardens Annex, a large tent extending completely over Front street and covering a large lot at the rear of the Wayne Hotel. When the association having the Congress in charge decided to hold it in Detroit, they realized that the benefits to the State of Michigan from the holding of such a great building interest in Michigan would be great. Governor Ferris of Michigan also appears to be very much in favor of the location for "Michigan Day." Friday, October 3, and has asked all officials of counties, cities and towns and villages to attend the Congress on that day.

Special representative W. J. Lasher, of the Pullman Motor Car Company of York, Pa., is located at the Hotel Astor for a few days in consultation with certain local interests regarding the establishment of a local Pullman agency. Mr. Lasher is confident that in the very near future his company will be represented in Boston by interests in keeping with his high-class line of motor cars.

The Pullman line consists of four models, both four and six cylinders.

General Salesmanager H. T. Myers of the New England branch of the Studebaker Corporation is spending a few days at the Detroit plant of his company.

George Wetherbee of the Hollander Motor Company has just arrived back from Pontiac, Mich., where he went to look over the 1914 Hollander model. He says there will be a new light, low-priced model in this line which ought to be a winner in the Boston field. It will not weigh over 2,000 pounds.

Melvin J. Adams, formerly advertising manager of the American Locomotive Company, has become identified with the Locomotive Company of America as assistant to J. A. Kingman.

TODAYS STOCK MARKET

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Irregularity as to prices prevailed in stock markets this morning and there was lack of any animation in trading. In Boston a small part of the usual Union Pacific and New Haven were unchanged, while United Fruit had risen a point. Among mines Butte and Superior, North Butte, Wolverine, Shattuck-Arizona and Tuolumne Copper lost advanced, while Calumet and Arizona, Granby and Superior were lower.

Price changes had been narrow in New York, as a rule, but Canadian Pacific was down 2 points and Lehigh Valley was up 1¾. Union Pacific had receded fractionately and leading and made the same kind of a gain. Prices were unchanged and Amalgamated lower.

New York Trend Uncertain.

At the opening in New York the trend was uncertain and prices irregular. The demand for stocks was far from being vigorous and upon the appearance of a leading buying element was all upon specialties. Economies readily proved to present stars. Union Pacific made a fractional gain and then receded until it showed an initial loss of a point. Lehigh Valley was more than 2 points above its previous sale and then receded until it showed an initial loss of a point. Reading was off a point. Among others Baltimore & Ohio, Southern Pacific, Peoples Gas, New Haven, Erie, Canadian Pacific and Interborough Metropolitan were lower. Among those in demand were Reading, Missouri Pacific, Lehigh Valley, Great Northern preferred, Chicago Milwaukee & Saint Paul. Both gains and losses averaged small. Lehigh Valley was among the strongest issues. Consolidated Gas also had good support.

American stocks were firm in London but trading in them was small. Canadian Pacific after rising in that market received a setback because of Berlin selling, which is said to have been caused by selling of loans.

The New York call was steady.

Geologist Arnold reports regarding California Petroleum that the corporation ought to expend at least $850,000 a year in drilling new wells.

Currency Bill in the Senate.

President Wilson wants the Senate to remain at work until it can dispose of the currency bill, although in Washington there are doubts as to the fate of that measure in the upper branch of Congress. It is proposed, however, that the House be permitted to adjourn for a month after finishing its work on the tariff and the other new law. Democratic leaders in the Senate desire to comply with the President's wishes, but it is said that a majority of the members of the Senate Banking Committee are against the currency bill as it now stands. The division will be, it is thought, seven to five against the measure. The bill is now before the committee, having been referred to it as soon as received from the House.

May Need White House Pressure.

"The difficulty," it is said, "will be to get the bill back from the committee. The administration undoubtedly hopes that the overwhelming support the bill received in the House would have a good effect in the Senate, but it is difficult to see where a majority can be found unless the President is willing to exert sufficient pressure to bear on Democrats not in favor of the bill as it stands.

"If the committee stands firm in its present opposition the only way to get the measure before the Senate will be to instruct the committee by resolution to report the measure. This has been done in regard to tariff bills in the last few years. But the measure of Democratic control is so slight that such a course would have doubtful chance of success. The same two Democrats who at present oppose the bill in committee would reduce Democratic control on the floor of the Senate to a margin of one, and there is reason to doubt that several Democrats not on the committee are opposed to the bill."

Some Democrats Disappointed.

There is disappointment on the part of some Democrats in the House because the currency bill did not prohibit interlocking directorates. The matter would have been fought out in the courts, but for the administration's stand. Mr. Underwood introduced a resolution there referring the whole question to the House Judiciary Committee with instructions to report a new bill within ten days. The bid directors of the old bill in financial, industrial railroad corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

At Work on Tariff Bill.

Congressional conferees are at work on the tariff bill and making progress. No serious differences have developed, but the conferees will not be reported to the Senate or House before Monday. Senator Simmons hopes to report the work ahead of probable time.

Senate conferees are standing firm for a rate of one-tenth of a cent per pound on bananas, which President Wilson insists shall be admitted free. It is expected that the President will win.

It has been decided that antimony shall go upon the free list. The Senate steps out on free pig iron. The House is firm against free-listing ferromanganese, the product controlled by the Steel Trust.

The Senate has won out on its fight for a countervailing duty on wheat and wheat flour. This duty is 45 cents a barrel of 196 pounds on flour and 10 cents a bushel on wheat. If Canada continues to impose a duty on wheat and flour under this provision these same products from Canada when imported into the United States will be free, as now named.

Burlaps, press cloth, cotton threads and cotton cloth are still in dispute. So are works of art, furs, the wool of the angora goat and the like. Under the new law shall go into effect with respect to raw wool and woolen goods on the first April 1st, the experts have made another computation and estimated the revenues from the bill at less than $100,000 a year. There will be no conclusion on some of the big items that have been passed over. The decision of the conferees on the Senate amendments proposing a tax of $1.40 a gallon on all drinks containing forty per cent wines was vigorously attacked in the Senate by Senator Pomerene, who declared that the proposition was dropped he would make a fight on the floor of the Senate against approval of the conference report.

The meat inspection provision applicable to imported fresh meats to be settled. The essential features of proper inspection are retained.

London Copper Quotations.

The London copper warrants market opened firm with spot up 15s. and futures 12s 6d.

Violent fluctuations in that market have not inspired consumers with a desire to buy any more metal than is absolutely necessary at the prevailing prices. Electrolytic is being quoted at 17 cents a pound and it is said that it is exceedingly difficult to get any for October delivery below that figure, or 16½ cents at the outside. There is a pause in the buying movement.

Financial News in Brief.

President Baer of the Reading Company has ordered fifty-five 40t steel cars from the Pressed Steel Corporation and he will pay $13,000 for each. This purchase is said to be the result of the recent coal trouble wreck on the New Haven road.

It is announced that the St. Paul road agreement was a comprehensive plan for new building under consideration, and that it calls for authorization of a refunding mortgage on the entire system.

Wheeler Cleared by Italian Minister

ROME, Sept. 19.—The Minister of Finance has exonerated Post Wheeler, Secretary of the American Embassy, of the charge of abusing the privileges granted by the Italian government to import gasoline for his personal use duty free. Wheeler is on his way to Washington to answer the charge at the Department of State.

Quincy Club Quits Tennis on Sundays

Chief Burrill of the Quincy Police Department has decided he will not prosecute the sixteen members of the Quincy Tennis Club, whose names he obtained for playing on Sunday, as long as they refrain from taking part in the sport on succeeding Sundays. The case was scheduled for the District Court today.

Democrats: Stop and Think

If You Renominate Those Party Apostates Who Voted for the Trolley Merger Bill, You Will Put Mr. Walsh and the Party on the Defensive

DEMOCRATS, have you seen the following question which the Boston Journal, the organ of the Progressive party, is asking of Mr. Walsh?

OPEN QUESTION FOR DAVID I. WALSH, DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

The Democratic State Convention of 1912, as assembled in Faneuil Hall, October 5, adopted the following as one of the party pledges:

"We are opposed to the ownership or control of our street railways by the steam railroads, and we believe it should go no further in this State."

A bill which gave the New Haven Railroad control over the trolley lines of the five western counties of Massachusetts was passed over the Governor's veto by both branches of the Legislature, June 12, 1913. At that time

Seven of the fourteen Democratic Senators voted in favor of the bill.

Forty-five of the ninety-five Democratic Representatives voted in favor of the bill.

MR. WALSH: Are YOU in favor of the re-election of the Democratic members of the Legislature who broke their party pledges and voted for the trolley merger bill?

OR

Do you repudiate your party platform?

THE PUBLIC HAS A RIGHT TO KNOW.

Democrats, are you going to tie Mr. Walsh up to those fifty-two railroad lackies who have no sense of party honor and who break their party pledges whenever the railroad lobby cracks the whip?

This is just what you will do if you RENOMINATE THESE FIFTY-TWO Democratic apostates. Are you willing to put Mr. Walsh on the defensive by NOMINATING ON THE SAME BALLOT WITH HIM these fifty-two men whose conduct in the last Legislature Mr. Walsh has just declared is the HIGHEST FORM OF POLITICAL TREASON?

Big Salaries Do Not Make Big Men

The Enormous Wages Paid to the Officials of Our Public Service Corporations Are Out of Proportion to the Capacity of the Men and to the Character of Their Labor—They Are Unfair to the Public, Which Really Pays Them, and Unfair to the Rank and File Under Them

The publication of the salary list of the Boston Elevated Railway calls attention to a practice by our public service corporations which must sooner or later be CHANGED.

The enormous salaries which are paid to the officials of these corporations are OUT OF PROPORTION TO THE CAPACITY of the men and to the character of their labor. An excessive salary list for executive officers is an unnecessary charge upon the public which has to pay the expenses of the public service corporations.

It is UNFAIR to the RANK AND FILE in the corporation's service—the men behind the guns—who do the hardest work, put in the longest hours, and receive the smallest pay. It works harm in still another way.

It makes the men who receive these stupendous salaries seem to the uninitiated far greater men than they actually are.

General Bancroft, with all his $36,000 a year, is no bigger man intellectually and he has less physical resources, which count so much in successful work, than when he was a struggling lawyer and alderman in the city of Cambridge.

Lucius Tuttle was an HEROIC FIGURE in this community when he received $40,000 a year as president of the Boston & Maine, yet when the crisis came, how he SHRIVELED. There were men on his trains, conductors, brakemen, engineers and firemen, who would not have allowed, without at least a struggle, the stockholders who trusted him, the community which held him in respect, to be VICTIMIZED by a band of Wall Street SPECULATORS, who sought and obtained control of the Boston & Maine, not only WITHOUT MR. TUTTLE'S OPPOSITION but with his constrained collusion.

There were men under Mr. Tuttle, drawing one-fortieth his salary, whose PRIDE would never have permitted them to BEND THE KNEE to a band of raiders who held his management up to public scorn and made his INCAPACITY in the work which was his life's career the excuse for their seizure of his railroad.

Big salaries and big fortunes do not make big men, but they make men SEEM BIG to the thoughtless, and most of us are thoughtless. This is a material age, when the Jupiter among our false gods is MONEY. We judge the SIZE of men by the size of their INCOMES. We do not stop to consider that the Mayor of Boston is the head of a corporation fifty times greater in wealth than the Boston Elevated, and with many, many times more stockholders.

The Mayor of Boston receives $10,000 a year. It is ENOUGH, but it LOOKS SMALL compared with General Bancroft's $36,000, and Howard Elliott's $75,000. The Governor of Massachusetts receives but $10,000 a year. The Attorney-General receives only $8,000 for his entire time, while General Counsel J. Otis Wardwell receives $25,000 for a very small part of his time.

These contrasts in salaries militate greatly against the respect in which the public hold their less paid public officials, and it makes it more difficult for the public to keep these men from the seductions of the big corporation salaries. It also makes the little men in our legislative bodies and in the other branches of the public service look with awe upon the high-salaried men in the corporations' service.

Those who attend the legislative hearings on matters which affect the interests of the public service corporations cannot fail to notice the impression which these high-salaried agents make upon Representative Jones and Representative Smith of the committee, who never saw $10,000 at one time in their lives.

The time is coming when these things must be ALTERED. If the high-salaried list of the Boston Elevated were cut down to the level of the salaries paid to public officials for the same quality of work, perhaps $100,000 A YEAR COULD BE SAVED.

At any rate, a very considerable sum could be turned back INTO THE WAGES OF THE RANK AND FILE or given to the IMPROVEMENT OF THE SERVICE.

The Boston Elevated is no different in this respect from any other corporation. It is a practice which has grown up from the negligence of the public itself. People too often forget that THEY pay the bills —every dollar of them—contracted by the public service corporation, and they benefit by its economies, if they keep water out of its stock and limit its unshared dividends.

The AMERICAN believes that it would be a very good thing if the Public Utilities Commission should investigate the salaries paid by ALL OUR PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS. When these corporations say that they CAN'T RAISE WAGES, and CAN'T IMPROVE THEIR SERVICE, or ask for an increase of rates, it would be well to know how economically they are conducting their business.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XXX.

ALL during that dreary Winter in Middlebrook, Mary Fletcher was painfully conscious of her husband's increasing love for liquor. But he never came home really drunk until one stormy night in late March, a week before the baby was born. His wife and her mother waited until some time after the arrival of his usual train, then took their dinner so that the older woman might go to bed. This was the daughter's suggestion, for she feared—without cause, she told herself—the condition in which the master of the house might appear, if he came in later. Her mother did not suspect the truth with regard to Bert's weakness. She must not. So Mary hurried her up to her room, chatted with her nervously as the preparations were made for the night. Then, kissing her mother, she put out the light, closing the bedroom door tightly that any sounds from below stairs might not penetrate to the sleeper's ears.

As Mary washed the dishes and put them away, she remembered one night, months ago, when she had sent her mother to bed and awaited the coming of her suitor—the man who was now her husband. She seemed to have lived a lifetime since then. The dinner dishes put in the closet, and the table set for breakfast, the anxious wife seated herself by the lamp in the parlor, and tried to put the finishing touches on the tiny wrapper she was making. She had fashioned all her baby's clothes herself, and this was the last garment. She was sorry that the bit of dainty work should be done when she was nervous, for the stitches were slightly uneven.

"But," she whispered, with an attempt to be humorous with herself, "Baby will not mind."

The whistle of the ten o'clock train sounded through the quiet village. The wife folded the little wrapper, then, with a sudden motion, pressed it to her lips. "My baby! my baby!" she whispered. For his sake she must keep herself calm. But even this thought failed to quiet the wild beating of her heart as the time drew near when she might expect her husband. She began to pace the floor, pausing often to listen. At last she heard stumbling, uneven footsteps on the walk, and she hurried to the front door and flung it open, peering out into the darkness.

"Bert," she called softly, "is that you?"

"Who the devil were you expectin' this time o' night?" queried the man thickly, as he staggered up the steps toward her. She paled and shrank from him as he uttered the coarse joke, then, as he reeled on the top step, she sprang forward and caught him by the arm.

"Softly, Bert," she cautioned, "or you'll wake mother!"

"And what if I do?" he demanded angrily. "I expect a man's got a right to make all the noise he chooses in his own house, ain't he? I'm boss here, remember! She ain't even a boarder."

"Yes, Bert, I know," assented his wife. She recollected that she had heard one should never argue with an intoxicated man. Anything now to keep him quiet. The smell of his breath made her feel faint, and she shuddered as she saw the blurred eyes, the drooping jaw and the stained clothes. Herbert Fletcher had fallen down, and his trousers were caked with mud. Drunk as he was, he saw her recoil as she glanced at his coat.

"Yes," he said roughly, "it's pretty dirty, I know, but you needn't take on any o' your fine lady airs about it! Many a better woman than you has had to tend her husband when he was under the weather. You oughter be pityin' me 'stead o' lookin' like a white saint despisin' a sinner. Here, help me off with this coat!"

She took hold of the garment with trembling hands. But for thought of the unsuspecting woman upstairs she was sure she would refuse to touch it. He might do his worst. What if he did fly into a rage and kill her—his wife—what difference would that make? It would be a blessing if he did kill her now before her baby came. Then her common sense reasserted itself, and, setting her teeth, she obeyed her husband's commands. When, with much coaxing, she had gotten him safely upstairs and past her mother's door, she undressed him and helped him into bed. Then, when his heavy breathing assured her that he was sleeping, she took the stained clothes into the bath room, locked herself in and scoured the soiled garments, opening the window wide that the cold outer air might lessen the attack of deathly nausea that seized her. Carrying the clothes down to the kitchen, she hung them to dry on the backs of chairs near the range in which she had already banked the fire for the night. It would not do for her mother to see these garments drying upstairs in the morning, for she might suspect the truth. Then the worn woman crept down into the cellar and, with as little noise as possible, deposited several heaping shovelfuls of coal on the furnace. If this task were neglected, the fire would be out in the morning, and she would have to make a fresh blaze before the family were astir.

The furnace attended to, Mary Fletcher got as far as the little parlor where the lamp was still burning. Here she dropped down exhausted on the glaring blue sofa. For a while she did not move, but as she became conscious that she was growing chilly she pulled over her the hideous green-and-yellow slumber robe that had been Bert's Christmas present to her, and arranged under her head the hard but gorgeous sofa cushion which had been her mother-in-law's holiday gift to the household. The wife felt that she had endured all she could, that tonight she could not bear to sleep in the room that she and Bert shared in common. The wind rattled the windows, and the rain dashed against the panes. The listener was so tired that she could not think, but could only be aware of her misery.

Yet, so drunk was her husband that he did not know the next morning that his wife had not lain by his side all night. His head ached furiously and he growled to Mary, when she told him it was nearly breakfast time, that he would "cut business today."

To her mother the wife said calmly that "Bert had come home late with one of his bad headaches, and was so far from well today that she would not disturb him, even to have him go to business."

Dorothy Dix's Article —ON— Marriages--Fewer Because People Think—Cold Logic Has Displaced Sentiment and the Mating Instinct—Intelligent Persons Now Glance Into the Future

By DOROTHY DIX

NEW YORK CONSERVATION COMMISSIONER E. E. RITTENHOUSE asks, "Why are there more than seventeen million unmarried men and women in the United States?"

"Never," he says, "has a nation been so prosperous or so within reach of the comforts and luxuries of life. Yet people do not marry. There is something wrong. What is it?"

There are many reasons why people do not marry. One is the high cost of living, for while the nation is undoubtedly prosperous, the golden stream doesn't wash by every man's door to an extent that enables him to support a family in any decent comfort.

The main reason, however, that there has been what Mr. Wegg called a decline and fall off in matrimony is because people have begun to use their heads instead of their hearts in deciding the matter. Cold logic has superseded the mating instinct in dealing with the problem.

Men and Women Wed Formerly on Sentiment

In former times men and women married simply because they were attracted to some member of the opposite sex. Whether they could feed or clothe a family, or whether they were likely to bequeath some terrible inheritance to their offspring, did not enter into their calculation. They went it blind, without regard to consequences to themselves or any one else. Now intelligent men and women consider before marriage whether they have a right to marry and bring into the world deformed and diseased children, or children that they will have to sell into child slavery because of poverty.

Also men and women are becoming afraid to marry. They see that nine-tenths of the marriages in the world are failures, so far as bringing any happiness to either husband or wife, and so they decide that single blessedness is better than double wretchedness.

Only a few days ago a brilliant young physician, who has already achieved success, said to me that nothing on earth, after what he had seen of matrimonial misery through the practice of his profession, could ever induce him to marry. He recognized that the ideal marriage was the happiest lot on earth, but the chances against it were too great. He was playing no hundred-to-one shot at happiness.

And the same theory holds good at the other end of the social line. The other day a large manufacturer sent me a letter that was as curious and interesting a human document as were the letters of Grace Brown. This letter had been written by a little untaught mill girl, who was only seventeen, but who, in some strange way, had fathomed the depths of the philosophy of modern life. It was written to her sweetheart, breaking off her engagement to him, and it fell into the manufacturer's hands through one of his stenographers having written it for the girl on the typewriter, and a carbon copy of it having been left lying about.

The letter in part is as follows:

"I have wanted to tell you that I cannot marry you, and you know the reason. I hope you will not think hard of me, and will understand why under the circumstances I must refuse. We both have our living to make, and you know we could not get along on what you make now, the way living expenses are. It was different when our fathers and mothers married; people then were satisfied with less, and there were not so many things to see, and go to, and to buy.

"I know you think you could do without some things, and I believe you would try, but after a little while you would begin to wonder if you are getting enough to make up for what you had given up. You know our friends are not all married, and they would still be able to go and do things when we could not. You and I would still be young folks, although we were married, and I think we would both feel bad when we saw the good times our single friends were having, and which we used to have, and could not have any more. Why cannot we still be good friends and sweethearts, and wait until you can get into some little business where I could help, and we would have more to work on?

"I am writing this to you so you cannot interrupt me until I am through. I know you love me, and it is nice to be loved, and I think you know I love you, but we cannot marry now. It would make us both miserable."

In this letter you have the reason why most of the seventeen million men and women in this country who are unmarried don't marry. They love. They would like to marry, but they have faced the fact that it takes bread and butter as well as sentiment to keep a house going.

The girl at work can make a decent living for herself. The man at work can make a decent living for himself, but the man doesn't make enough to make a decent living for the girl and himself both, and the children that they may have. So they stay single.

Increase in Bachelors and Spinsters Explained

Also the standard of living has been raised. As the little mill girl says, "When our fathers and mothers married people were satisfied with less, and there were not so many things to see and go to and to buy." It's folly to ignore this, and to talk about going back to the simple life. We can't do it. We can't go back to tallow dips after electric light, or ride on a stage coach after we are used to steam cars. It's unromantic, but true, that it's easier to do without a husband or wife than it is to do without the comforts to which we are accustomed.

All of which makes it rough for Cupid, but it explains the ever-increasing number of old maids and old bachelors.

A LETTER FROM MR. BIRD

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I am writing you to call attention to the fact that your editorial of September 17th does not report correctly my position as to the railroad question in Massachusetts.

I have not said or implied in any way that I favored any course which would result in a continuation of our experience with the New Haven Railroad.

My position is clear beyond any misunderstanding. I have said and repeat now:

1.—I am opposed to the New Haven owning trolley roads and believe it should be compelled to dispose of trolley lines in this and other States.

2.—Unless the New Haven road demonstrates at once a better management, it would be wise for the State to exercise its right to take, and if necessary, operate the Boston & Maine.

3.—No one, and this includes the AMERICAN and myself, can at this moment know what Mr. Elliott will do. If he has his chance and does not take the public into his confidence, if he does not prove a real leader and manage the road for Massachusetts and the people as well as for the stockholders, then I will welcome State ownership. In this connection, perhaps, you should know that neither I nor any member of my family owns directly or indirectly a dollar's worth of interest in the New Haven system. Before anything can be done by the State, as the AMERICAN knows, Mr. Elliott will have a chance to show his position. He should have that chance without being hampered by expressions of ill will. If the State is to act it must be with a strong hand.

But the strong hand must be clean.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES SUMNER BIRD.

Boston, Sept. 18.
